East Side to Host Annual Festival

Looking for a fun way to celebrate the fall or make “back-to-school” not feel like a bummer? An exciting new tradition, on the East Side, will kick off this September with the “East Side Family Festival.” The first annual festival will be held on Saturday, September 9th from 10:00AM to 2:00PM. This will be a fun filled event that celebrates the families of the Dayton’s Bluff area and its surrounding neighborhoods. Families can come and enjoy entertainment, play games, make art projects, participate in carnival activities and eat!

The idea for the festival came about from the shared mission of its two sponsor groups, First Lutheran Church and the Young Artists Initiative (YAI). Both groups have a mission of bringing families in the East Side closer together and strengthen the community and thought that an annual celebration, such as this, would be the perfect way to do it! The event is completely free and open to the public, so make sure that you mark it on your calendars. All the activities will take place on the courtyard at First Lutheran Church at 463 Maria Avenue. If there is rain, the activities will be moved into the churches banquet hall, so come rain or shine.

If you are interested in volunteering, donating your talents or if your business would like to participate, please contact the Young Artists Initiative Information line at 651-222-KIDS (5437) or First Lutheran Church at 651-776-7210.

New Art Exhibit at Metro State

Metropolitan State University Third Floor Gallery is pleased to present Folk Nouveau, featuring art by five Minnesota artists—Beth Barron, Minneapolis, Dean Luckier, Saint Paul, Judy Onofrio, Rochester, Douglas Padilla, Minneapolis, and Ann Wood, Saint Paul.

The exhibit opens Thursday, Sept. 7 with a reception from 4–7 p.m. The exhibit continues through Friday, Sept. 29. Gallery hours are Mondays–Thursdays, 11 a.m.–7 p.m.; Fridays–Saturdays, 11 a.m.–4 p.m. The gallery is located in the Library and Learning Center, 645 East Seventh Street, Saint Paul.

The artists of Folk Nouveau are a far cry from the traditional notion of folk artists. They are not uneducated or isolated. Rather, they are informed citizens of the world working in a visual and tactile format. What they share is an appreciation for a humble hand and everyday materials.

For example, Baron embroiders domestic textiles that may be small in scale, but relay monumental sentiment. Band-Aids, handkerchiefs and duct tape tell stories of personal and communal grief. These works are not without beauty or an inkling of optimism, for they are often embellished with elegant threads and glass beads that seduce the eye.

Onofrio’s figurative sculptures, which reflect events in the artist’s life, are executed with what others might consider to be debris of a consumer society. Bits of vintage jewelry, bottle caps, pottery shards and other oddities provide rich textures for her whimsical works.

Wood and Luckier find inspiration in the work of Mid-Western folk artists and low-tech animated toys and games. When working as a team, they craft kinetic objects, which are playful and engaging. They allow people to rekindle their childhood imaginations. As individual artists they conjure emotive works that are often technically sophisticated.

Padilla’s raw and energized paintings often address his Norwegian and Mexican heritage. His ethnic background is evident in the iconography and palette he chooses. His work is adorned with surprising and accessible media. Anything from spray foam insulation to architectural fragments make their way into Padilla’s work.

Dayton’s Bluff Home Restoration Effort Wins Saint Paul Heritage Preservation Award

By Steve Trimbble

"Love reveals beauty in old house" read a Pioneer Press headline on May 17, 2006. The Nelson home at 653 North Street was one of the projects featured at the recent St. Paul Heritage Preservation Awards. This is the sixteenth annual recognition of worthy efforts given out by the St. Paul Heritage Commission, a group charged with protecting and preserving the heritage of St. Paul.

For this particular honor, the Heritage Preservation Committee and the St. Paul chapter of the American Institute for Architects presented the Nelsons with a special “Vote of Confidence” award for all of their work. The city reporter who covered the event only had room to say a little about the Dayton’s Bluff family. Here is some of the rest of the story.

Thomas and Kristenza Nelson were residents of the Macalester-Groveland neighborhood when a 1998 fire destroyed the house they were leasing. It proved very difficult to find another rental space that would let them have their 110 pound German Shepherd. They house sat for a while, but were constantly looking for a place of their own.

Kris admits that at the time they had never heard of the area she now proudly calls home. Then while surfing the internet, her husband ran across the Upper Swede Hollow Neighborhood Association web site that had listings for a few houses in need of owners. She’d never even heard of the neighborhood.

It didn’t seem to be on any of the maps they looked at. But, as Kris remembered, “We were really scrambling for a place to live” so they decided to visit. When they did, they liked “the kinds of grass roots things that were happening.” But when the couple strolled through Swede Hollow Park and looked up at the Victorian structure as it reflected the evening sunset, they knew that it was the only place for them.

In a swift timeline that amazed their friends, they were soon owners of an 1889 Queen Anne style house. It needed a lot of work, but they were ready to take it on. “We came with the keys and each other and a bottle of champagne,” Kris remembered. They started peeling up old carpet the first night they were in their new home.

Kris remembers a good feeling about the house from the beginning. The sense was reinforced when they were closing on the property. They found out that the firefighter who had been first on the scene when their former rental house went up in flames had grown up in the North street house. “Without trying to sound hokey,” she remarked, “it seemed like we were meant to be there.”

They were going to have to do a lot of work to make the building into their dream house. They loved nice woodwork, but most of it on the lower floor had been stripped out and replaced. Kris has coined a name for what happened to the old home. It had been “Menardized,” and needed a lot of restoration.

Kris and Tom did much of the work themselves, with some welcome help from family and friends. The efforts ranged from general clean up and painting to tearing the asbestos siding off of the three story structure. A major project was building a new front porch to bring back the structure’s original look.

One early surprise was discovering a hidden stained glass window that had been concealed by interior and exterior sheets of plywood. It was so old and dirty that they couldn’t see much but then there was a second part to the surprise. When it was cleaned off they discovered that the glass was primarily green, yellow and purple—the colors that they had earlier chosen for their exterior paint.

Kris took a little time off when the couple had their first child. Shortly after the birth of a second child, tragedy struck 653 North Street. Thomas unexpectedly died in his sleep of a heart attack in January of 2006. He was only thirty-five years old.

Sometimes after such an event, people decide to move away to avoid bad memories. Not so for Kris, who said that her family’s love was clearly intertwined with the house. “Through everything, it is this house that has sustained us. I feel all of the work Tom put into it.”

Kris is now a stay-at-home mom of sorts; however, she does work part time, mostly as a free lance photographer with a degree from Minnesota College of Art and Design. A personal love of gardening has also led to some small jobs doing landscape work for other people.

She does a lot of her own work at night with outdoor lights after the kids are sleeping and juggling it with that in the neighborhood she is known as “the midnight gardener.”

Kris also has a darkroom in the house and has been doing a lot of photography in the area, focusing currently focusing on Swede Hollow Park.

Historic St. Paul, a group that advocates for preservation of older homes, has been in big business as well. She had participated in some old siding tear-offs before coming to Dayton’s Bluff, but never dreamed that she would get involved in such a major effort herself. “It really is such an important program and such an important thing in this neighborhood.”

The community “has really become better as we go backward.”

Kris also never dreamed that she would get a big award. “It was a total surprise.” She had received a few small awards for her volunteer work, including helping design and build local rain gardens. Besides attending the program at the Landmark Center and being recognized by city elected officials was a thrill.

Kris does not agree with the people who say that a sense of neighborliness can’t be found in big cities. “There are so many young families here,” and they made them feel welcome. One example she loves to point out is that they were invited to inherit a tree from the nearby Carey household.

Whenver time permits, the house restoration proceeds. Photography is an ongoing project, with the goal of doing one side of the house a year. Kris is working on the second coat on one section. Right now the kids are a little too young to use a brush. Andreas is two and a half and his younger brother Alexander is a little over one year old.

With them in mind, Kris is determined to complete the work. “Community is just so important,” she often says. “This is such a great neighborhood...I can’t imagine raising my kids anywhere else.”

Business Blogging on the Bluffs #3

You’ve decided your purpose for your blog. To develop a more personal contact with customers? To build a new customer base or try going international? Another thing you can do is to use your blog to develop new revenue lines. (Down the road, I’ll discuss how this can be done.) Whatever your reason, it will determine if you need to be highly ranked, or not, by search engines. For the sake of this article, I’m assuming you want the ultimate Search Engine Optimization. There are some techniques you can use to help you become ranked highly.

As always, you want to write good content in your blog postings. Make people want to read what you have to say. That said, there are concepts you can use to change your ranking significantly. It’s important to use the best keywords and phrases possible. What sounds better to you, “A beautiful yard” or “A thick, lush carpet of deep green grass”? This gives the search engines a number of keywords, and phrases to choose from. Think of words, and phrases, that people will use when doing searches. Periodically, check keyword popularity by searching for different, but similar, words and phrases.

The length of your posts can make a difference. A minimum of 250 is the standard. Although, you don’t always need lengthy posts, you want to have several paragraphs of naturally keyword rich content. Also, you want to put the keywords, as close to the top of posts as you can.

Young Artists Initiative’s “James and the Giant Peach” Production a Hit

By Nathaniel Churchill, The Young Artists Initiative’s (YAI) summer production of Roald Dahl’s classic children’s story, James and the Giant Peach, was a big success and its cast has something to be very proud of. The production featured nineteen youth actors from the East Side, as well as its surrounding neighborhoods. The cast was enrolled in YAI’s summer program called the “Summer Theater Experience.” In this program, students spent five weeks participating in theater workshops and rehearsing a full-scale production. While in the program the young actors learned such things as improvisation, creating character voices, using their bodies to create believable characters, theater terminology and even how to make costumes.

The highlight of the five weeks was to mount an actually fully designed production and supported production that ran for the last two weekends of August. The students also had the privilege to be the very first theater company to perform in the brand new Neighborhood House Theater located in the Paul and Sheila Wellstone Center for Community Building on the Westside of Saint Paul. The show’s director, Jefferson Fietek, said, “the new theater space is perfect for the work we do. Even when you walk into the lobby the artwork and the design celebrates the diversity of our community and the youth we are trying to reach. Also, every seat in the theater makes you feel a part of the action!”

An Opening Night Fundraiser Gala kicked off the Young Artists Initiative’s production. The evening was full of entertainment, food and a silent auction. Fietek was pleased by the organizations that stepped up to help out with such organizations as the Twins, the Vikings, the Timberwolves, the Thunder, the Swarm, the Chanhassen Dinner Theaters, the Children’s Museum, and the Actors Theater who produces the interactive hit “We-Gotta-Bingo.” The YAI is run by volunteers, so the money raised through ticket sales and the Gala went to support student scholarships and support future youth programming.

The organization is not taking a break however now that this show is closed. They are already gearing up for an interactive Halloween show based on the children’s story “The Witches” that will open in October. To learn more about them and the work they do, you can explore their website at www.youngartistsmn.org.

More Memories of Mrs. Jilk

By Randy Garcia.

Mrs. Jilk was my Kindergarten Teacher at old Sibley Elementary for the school year 1969-1970. I have thought often of Mrs. Jilk over the years. She impacted me in a way very few educators, no let me say, people ever have. For me there was an unconditional acceptance that exuded from her. In her presence you understood that you were ok.

As I look back to that time I recall making butter from whipping cream, visiting a farm for a field trip, taking naps on a braided rug, developing my first friendships outside of my immediate neighborhood, missing her when we had the occasional substitute, and most important to me - looking forward to each day of school.

I currently live in Martinsville, VA. Many miles and many years removed from 1969’s East 6th Street. I do not know what prompted me to conduct a “Google Search” this evening for Mrs. Jilk. But I am glad I did. Please extend to her my heartfelt thanks for the acceptance she extended to one student so many years ago.

Area Resident Graduates from Law School

Dan Stahley, the son of Dayton’s Bluff residents Greg and Linda Stahley, recently graduated from law school. He grew up on Maria Street in the Mounds Park area with two brothers. Dan attended Harding High School where he played basketball and won awards for his mastery of the French language. He graduated in 1999.

Stahley then went on to earn a B.A. degree from Hamline University in the spring of 2003. He had decided he wanted to become an attorney so that he could stay in the Twin Cities and hopes to take the Minnesota bar exam. Stahley plans to stay in the Twin Cities and hopes to start work as a clerk for a judge or find a position with a small law firm.

For the past several months Beatrice Collins has been interning with the Dayton’s Bluff Community Council. She went through the block club manual and helped rewrite it, attended meetings and generally helped around the office. As this assignment ended, she was asked to write about her life and the impact of the internship on her personal development.

Beatrice was born in Illinois, growing up in a tough area on Chicago’s West Side. Even as a child she had, as she put it “seen violence unfold before me,” and observed “gangs that became an organized crime force terrorizing neighborhoods, businesses and other communities and schools all over the Chicago area.”

She attended George W. Collins High School, which was located at 1313 S. Sacramento Street. Unfortunately, Bernice “fell behind in class” but, as she put it, “I did not let that stop me from earning a diploma.” She realized that a diploma was “very much needed” to reach the dream of starting “to begin living at what I call middle or average class.” Bernice ended up graduating from night school in August, 1982, at the age of eighteen.

She faced a lot of personal and family sadness as a youngster. Her stepfather died in a car crash. She struggled with the demise of her brother, Willie Round-they always called him Junior- who died in jail from a health ailment that was not properly treated. Other family members, including grandmothers, passed away around the same time. As she put it: “I knew then and still know now that life is precious with every waking moment.”

Bernice, who arrived here around 1983 in her twenties, had heard Minnesota was a “women and kid’s state” where a person can get a lot of support for raising families. She has been in the Twin Cities ever since. “I love it here but I miss my family back in Chicago. Not that I did not enjoy Chicago it’s home and always will be but I have a new home here in Saint Paul Minnesota.”

Bernice lives in the Dayton’s Bluff area. She has three children. Two of them are young adults in their twenties and off on their own. Her seventeen-year-old boy is still living at home and attends Johnson High School. She has become active in the neighborhood and is a very active block club member, recently helping to organize a Nation Night Out event for her organization.

Upon arrival here, “college was just a thought in my mind,” she reflected. “Before I was not motivated enough to go beyond high school.” But Bernice did end up getting additional education. When Bernice decided to enter Brown College, she was considering a career in music. “Singing is what drives me because I love music. It is what I wanted to pursue. But I felt the years had slipped by and that it was to late to seek that dream.” After looking at other programs, “I thought criminal justice would be a good area of learning because I was not as clear about what my rights were growing up. Now I realize how that can make a difference in one’s life.” She especially hopes to affect “the youth of today whose minds are distrustful and corrupted with violence in the media and elsewhere.”

“The course of furthering my education beyond high school while in mid-forties,” Bernice remarks, “has been one of my most challenging experiences. Even while enduring life hardships, much was accomplished. The teaching and learning about the criminal justice system and the Dayton’s Bluff Community Council is where reality sinks in.”

Before interacting with these two groups she had lacked the knowledge to make the most of her talents. These experiences helped Bernice be more aware of possibilities and “make changes in my life and apply what I know to those resources offered in their neighborhood. They are there but what you do with the information really makes a difference—it did for me.”

Bernice reflects that on turning a negative into a positive. “Knowing what I had no knowledge of before just became a strength that most do not recognize,” she stated. “Wants” also pushed Bernice for change, “has given a person a desire to grow and excel in a career I never thought I would remotely pursue.”

“I had the privilege to intern at Dayton’s Bluff Community Council,” Bernice wrote. She credits Community Organizer Karin DuPaul with being a good role model by “demonstrating commitment, strength, and dedication in areas I have yet to grow in.” She also gives much credit to the staff of Brown College “where learning is possible. When you reflect back to what you did not imagine ever accomplishing, you realize that you have given a person a desire to grow and excel in a career I never thought I would remotely pursue.”

Greetings from SPPD Eastern District.

On behalf of the SPPD I would like to thank all of you who participated in this year’s National Night Out. Many of you came out in the rain to fellowship with your neighbors in park pavilions, church basements, blocked off streets and parking lots. It was clear to me that the residents of Dayton’s Bluff are committed to their community. I was impressed that many of you were not deterred by the rain and continued with your plans. What was even more impressive was that I never heard any of those getting wet complaining. This was a perfect opportunity to meet with old friends in the neighborhoods and be introduced to new ones.

Speaking of new friends, many of you have by now had the chance to meet and talk with Officer Chris Byrnes. Chris is a senior officer on Tour 3 and has had assignments in the Patrol Division, Motor Unit, FORCE Unit and has served as a department trainer. Chris has now been assigned to the Dayton’s Bluff Beat and we are lucky to have his knowledge and experience. We work opposite shifts which will ensure a Dayton’s Bluff Beat Officer is working each day to stay in touch with issues in the neighborhood. If you have not met Chris yet, come out and say hi when you see him drive by.

Before we know it the warm weather will be gone. Make an effort to get out of your homes, take a walk with a neighbor and remember to always treat each other with respect. Officer J. Sipes East District Tour 3 651-266-5565
