A familiar face returns home to Dayton’s Bluff

By Wally Waranka

For the past two years I have been honored to serve this community as your President of the Dayton’s Bluff council. I have enjoyed my time and hope I have represented you all well. I hope that I have been able to help keep the neighborhood moving forward and help start a few new things for the future. Although I won’t be President, I still plan to be a part of building a business association, as well as looking at new ways to keep promoting our neighborhood as being a great place to live and work.

In addition, I am looking forward to the beginning of the annual celebration for Dayton’s Bluff where we can showcase all of the great things we have and recognize the great things that have been accomplished. This last year I tried via my articles in the Forum to see if I could get some feedback from other neighbors. I did get some responses. Some may have been negative at times, but they represent a part of who we are in Dayton’s Bluff. I would like to let you all know that we have some fantastic people giving their time by serving on the council and trying to do the right things for our neighborhood. Yes, there is always the bad we can focus on and there will be always things to work on, but the more we do attack these issues the more they will get smaller and eventually go away. Believe me we are trying to attack them.

I would like to personally challenge each and every one of you who are reading this to look around and see how you can offer help to keep our neighborhood moving forward. It does not have to be a big dramatic effort. On the contrary, every action helps no matter how small. One way to be a part and an informed neighbor is to read your Forum, and if you see anything in the paper that interests you come out and be a part of it, please. As my last two years have shown me, we, the council, are only as effective as the feedback we get from you.

Don’t hesitate to let us know what we can do to help keep Dayton’s Bluff a great place to live. And don’t hesitate to help us remain that way. I won’t be going away and I will always be a proud Dayton’s Bluff resident in this great area of Saint Paul.

Looking for Neighborhood Honor Roll Candidates

The Dayton’s Bluff District 4 Community Council is looking for three people in Dayton’s Bluff to add to the honor roll this year. If you know of someone who has done an outstanding job of volunteer work in Dayton’s Bluff, call Karin at 772-2075 or email Karin@DaytonsBluff.org for more information.

The Saint Paul Neighborhood Honor Roll started in the 1980s and is a listing of Saint Paul citizens who have done outstanding service in their neighborhoods over a long period of time. Each year all 17 District Councils can add three names to the honor roll. Past honor roll inductees volunteered for years at a church or a school, served on their community council board of directors, block club leaders, led projects like buckthorn removal or spearheaded a community event.

Last year the Dayton’s Bluff District 4 Community Council added Jacob Dorrer, Jean Comstock, and Juanita Westman, for their years of service in the Dayton’s Bluff neighborhood.

The Saint Paul Neighborhood Honor Roll is located in the hallway on the third floor of Saint Paul City Hall. The quality and amount of volunteer time that make our communities better is amazing in Saint Paul.

They came to “Watch the Glow”

People gathered at Swede Hollow Henge in Swede Hollow Park September 29th. Some of the people only see each other at the Watch the Glow each year. A lot of stories were shared by former Swede Hollow residents, Hamm Brewery employees, and neighbors about Swede Hollow and the Hamm Brewery. In a large circle on top of Swede Hollow Henge everyone shared their reasons why this place is so important to them. A newer resident on Payne Avenue said that when walking through Swede Hollow she knew she wanted to live near this place. An eighty year old neighbor said she played here as a child and has always lived within a few blocks of Swede Hollow. Naomi Ch, Executive Director of the Asian Pacific Culture Center, said how much she enjoys attending the Watch the Grow and meeting all the people and that her organization is still working on locating their organization in the brewery.

Watch the Glow of the Setting Sun on the Red Brick Brewery is an annual event that started in 1995. It is an opportunity for everyone to join Friends of Swede Hollow to see the beautiful red/orange glow of the brick as the sun sets. Services are on the buildings. The celebration picnic followed the sun setting.

The evening was filled with more great Brewery and Swede Hollow stories, and music courtesy of Joe Sanchelli.

The event was a great success with lots of great conversations and good food thanks to Morellis, Culver’s on Old Hudson Road, Rainbow on Arcade, and Cub in Sunnys, Pepsi and Mike Grealish. Friends of Swede Hollow are already talking about next year’s “Watch the Glow”.

“A Christmas Story” returns

The Historic Mounds Theatre and the Portage for Youth are proud to present live on stage their 5th annual production of “A Christmas Story” by Jean Shepherd. This classic movie is brought to life on stage for the fifth year in a row to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the film’s release.

Humorist Jean Shepherd’s memoir of growing up in the Midwest in the 1940s follows 9-year-old Ralphie Parker in his quest to get a genuine Red Ryder BB gun under the tree for Christmas. Ralphie pleads his case before his mother, his teacher and even Santa Claus himself, with the same and always consistent response: “You’ll shoot your eye out kid.”

All the elements from the beloved motion picture are here including Ralphie’s father winning a lamp shaped like a woman’s leg in a net stocking as a major award; Scut Farkas, the school bully; the boys’ experiment with a wet tongue on a cold flagpole and more.

All profits from this play go to the Portage for Youth to support its programs.

Dates:

Neighborhood Clean Up is over for another year

The Dayton’s Bluff Neighborhood Clean Up was held on September 13th. Dayton’s Bluff Community Council Board members, residents, friends, and Reentry Services to Service did an excellent job of making the clean up flow smoothly. Thanks to everyone who helped with the Clean Up. We appreciate you all.

Neighborhood participation was much higher this year in part because of the free disposal of electronics. Many people found treasures in the Free Stuff reuse area. We appreciate everyone that helped.

Start the holiday season with a book reading!

Kick off your holidays with a special book reading by our own neighborhood histo- rian and enjoy winter treats while you listen.

Steve Trimble, Dayton’s Bluff resident and local history expert, will be reading from and talking about his book, “Historic Photos of St. Paul.” This high-quality, hardcover “coffee table” book is filled with fascinating photos of St. Paul to which Steve has added insightful background and hints of the future. Beginning in the 1840s, this book covers parks, neighborhoods, buildings, and people of St. Paul—including Dayton’s Bluff and the East Side—through the 1970s.

Steve’s talk will begin at 6:30 pm on Tuesday, November 11th, at the Dayton’s Bluff Community Council office at 798 East 7th Street. Complimentary holiday cookies and hot cider will be provided. Copies of the book will also be available for purchase and signing by the author. A great gift for anyone who lives, or has lived, in the city of St. Paul. Come and join us! To register email Karin@DaytonsBluff.org or call 651-772-2075.

Another’s Daynton’s Bluff Sort-of-Walking-History Tour

By Steve Trimble

You may remember that two issues ago, there was a history walking tour in the lowering Bluff area inside of the Daynton’s Bluff Historic District. Hopefully some of you decided to take it. This time will be a re-turn to looking at some of the neighborhood’s other interesting houses and buildings in some of the other areas. Since they are scattered around, there will not be an attempt to have an official type tour with directions. Instead, the struc-tures will be grouped into general areas, and you’ll have to find your own way around. The distances are probably too long for walking—at least for me—but perhaps you could make it a bicycle or automobile event.

One of the structures to be covered is inside of the historic district, but it was a little too far away to include in the last tour, so here’s the 411 on them.

707 Wilson: Schornstein Building

The first mention of William Schornstein was that he was a bartender at the Tivoli, a downtown tavern. By the 1880’s he had a two-story combination saloon and gro-cery made of brick. Unfortunately in 1884 a fire devastated Schornstein’s build- ing as well as a nearby house, a barn, a harness shop and a frame feed store. The extent of the conflagration may have been because the wetter at that time had been a cistern at Fifth and Maria, around half a mile away. But Schornstein immediately decided to rebuild in grander fashion. Later that year he hired prominent German-American ar-chitect Augustus F. Gauger who designed one of the first full-fledged multiple business buildings in the city. The structure attests to the pride that many Victorian commercial owners felt for their work-place.

The saloon and grocery store was an important gathering place for the area’s ethnic Germans. There were meeting rooms on the upper floors, where Schornstein lived from 1885 to 1921. In recent years, this building has been re- volutionized and it has been placed on the Na-tional Register of Historic Places in 1984.

East of the Historic District

The homes to be covered are in the same general area as the old Schornstein saloon and grocery and fan out eastward toward Hudson and Earl Streets. Some are quite old, others some-what new, but they all have interesting stories.

963 Wakefield: What Cheer Lawn

William Wakefield in 1859 or 1860 built this estate in what was outside of the city limits. He and his wife named it “What Cheer Lawn.” Its yard was once the whole block and it faced Territorial Road, which is now known as the Cenery Nursing Home.

935 Hudson Road: Dr. George Earl House

This remarkable Tudor Revival was built in 1913 as the home and sometimes office of Dr. George Earl, who was born in Iowa. The three bedroom, 89 year-old home has quarter-sawn oak in the dining room, sunroom, and all the hallways. This house has beautiful woodwork and craftsmanship. The living room is of mahogany, and the second floor features cherry. George Earl was, along with his brother Robert, a founder of the Mounds Park Sanitarium that opened in 1906 at Earl and seventh, was an important part of the development of Midway Hospital and Gillette Children’s Hospital and was an officer of the Mounds Park Bank.

1044 Wilshire: Henry L. Gray House

While most people think Summit Avenue when the name of Cass Gilbert comes up, Dayton’s Bluff does have one identified house that was designed by the famed architect. It was one of his early more modest houses, but has a great deal of charm.

Its original owner was Henry Gray, a Civil War veteran who came to St. Paul in 1882. He originally rented a house on North Street and worked a variety of jobs, in- cluding forerunner of a local coal company. After a time, he hired the firm of Gilbert and Taylor in 1887 to design this home. It was a combination of stick style ele- ments of later shingle style. Cass Gilbert had only been working in the city for three years, but would develop into a premier architect in Minnesota and throughout the nation. In 1889, he won the competi-tion for the design of our State Capitol.

The Gray’s had no children. They shared the house with boarders at various times. By 1895 Gray was a part-time salesman. In 1897 he moved to Seattle. The new owners rented it five years before sell- ing it to a traveling salesman for Gotzian Shoe Company who lived there until 1928.

Then the Brown family bought the house and then lived there for he next two decades.

975 Hudson: The Wolfkoff Building

Dr. Wolfkoff, with a medical degree from University of Minnesota initially estab- lished an office downtown in 1939. He practiced in Dayton’s Bluff from 1941 un- til his death on Nov 17, 1974. This yellow brick structure was erected in 1941 in a “ streamline moderne” archi- tectural style, near the end of the style’s popularity. It is a fine example of an inter- esting commercial style that is unique in this neighborhood.

Homes of Some Community Leaders

This section will consider the homes of various people from different eras. Their contributions are different, but all show how a tradition of community leadership has been a vital part of our neighborhood’s heritage.

205 Rose: Baumsteiger House

Although the family house is not an ar-chitectural gem, it is a structure that has an interesting story that speaks to the neighborhood’s history. William Wil- liam Baumsteiger, was born in Germany but came to St. Paul as a young boy. He ended up living in Dayton’s Bluff for nearly sixty three years. In 1900, he formed his own construc-tion company and built many homes and commercial structures on the East Side and throughout the city. For instance, his firm did the 1930’s addition to the old Harding High School at Third and Earl which now houses two St. Paul magnet schools. Baumsteiger also did a great deal of work for the Hammy’s Brewery.

Other members of his family joined him in the company, which lasted until the 1960’s. Baumsteiger was a long-time mem- ber of the Bethlehem Lutheran Church and served as an alderman from the city’s second ward from 1910 to 1914. He died in 1946 at age of 72.

923 Beech: The Buschman House

During the time when many people still used carriages and many businesses de-livered, they literally used housepower as a source of energy. These animals needed to have their metal shoes changed new and then and there was a great need for blacksmiths.

William E. Buschman was one of the city’s most well known blacksmiths and one of the last to go out of business with the arrival of the automobile era. He learned the trade from his father who had a small, covey over looking the不见 own enterprise at the northwest corner of 7th and Mendota in 1909. He lived in the Bluff from 1883 and started a three-term alderman from the Third Ward in 1908. A great deal of his business was from the nearby Sanitary Farm Dairy.

847 E. 4th: Harry Blackmun House

The route of the last tour went by the former home of Supreme Court Justice William Blackmun to the home of Dr. George Earl Blackmun, who was also a Supreme Court justice. The 1906 house, a traditional “ four-square” was home to the Blackmun fam- ily after they moved to St. Paul from Illi- nois. They ran a grocery store in the area. Harry attended Van Buren Elementary and then went on to Mounds Park High School. He was a fine student and won a scholarship to Harvard. After graduation he decided to enter Harvard Law School, graduating in 1932.

Blackmun taught for a year at the St. Paul College while he served as law clerk to U.S. circuit court judge, John B. Sanborn. Blackmun was a member of the law firm Dorsey, Coleman, Barker, Scott & Blackmun Minneapolis in 1939. He later became the resident counsel at the Mayo Clinic and Mayo Association. He was appointed to the Supreme Court by President Nixon.

While he is most remembered for writ- ing the Roe v Wade decision, he was in- volved in a number of important cases, was an active lecturer on the constitu- tional matters, especially personal privacy and opposition to the death penalty. He died in 1999.

909 East 5th: The Krahmer House

Ed Krahmer was born in 1905 and lived all of his life in the neighborhood. His grandfather was a German immigrant. As a child he contracted polio and from then on walked with a slightly noticeable limp. He gained strength working for a sister in law of his father’s brother, a member of the Dayton’s Bluff Community. He was a long-time member of the Dayton’s Bluff Community Council. He spearheaded the fight that stopped the construction of Highway 212 through the neighborhood. He also con- tributed some articles to the District Fo- rum in its early years.

Let’s Not Forget Workers Homes

Sometimes neighborhood tours focus on upper income homes. However, Dayton’s Bluff has always had an impor- tant working class contingent, so some of the smaller structures ought to be in- cluded. And just to add a little historic support, here’s a part of an article that was printed in the Pioneer in 1882:

“In the eastern part of the city, on Dayton’s bluff… several hundred dwell- ings have been erected, many of them being very handsome residences, but the major part being of the medium class, for the use of mechanics and employees of the various and the numerous factories that have sprung up and are springing up in the valley of Phalen’s Creek, along the line of the St. Paul & Duluth and the St. Paul & Omaha railroad.”

Sometimes information about the every- day life lives of blue-collar workers is hard to find, but here are the stories of a few of them.

889 E. Margaret: The Zahn House

Years ago the railroad had a great effect on the Dayton’s Bluff neighborhood. Be- cause of it many early industrial concerns were located along its tracks. There used to be a small railroad depot at today’s Earl and East Seventh. This is a fine example of the worker’s cottages that went up in this section of Dayton’s Bluff in the 1870’s and the next decade.

The house dates from around 1882. This is somewhat of a guess, because this was two years before the city began issuing building permits on a regular basis. Zahn was a cigar maker, a fairly common source of employment in those days. He died and left his wife with several children. She re- mained in the Margaret Street house, but lost ownership of it in 1891. She seem- ingly liked the neighborhood, because she stayed on as a renter until 1897.

1087 Ross: The William Smith Home

Built in 1885, this is typical of the many homes built for workers. It was originally owned by William Smith, a foreman at the Minnesota Terra Cotta Works, a factory owned by William Smith, a foreman at the Minnesota Terra Cotta Works, a factory located two blocks away. At the time the building was made, clay produced by the factory in which he worked. The clay was plentiful and easy to work with. The building was completed in 1909 and was used for a variety of purposes, including as a factory, a warehouse, and a school.

964 E. Minnehaha: The Eilers House

William Eilers came to St. Paul in 1885 and set up a business as a drayman, run- ning out of his downtown residence. He served four years in the Civil War. He later became a foreman at the factory in which he worked. The factory produced Terra Cotta, a hard, durable kiln-burnt clay produced by the factory in which he worked.

1020 Bush: The Lyon House

John P. Lyon is said to have been the youngest soldier in the Civil War. Born in New Jersey in 1835, he became a drummer boy for Company G of the 81st Ohio. He had joined up five days before his elev- enth birthday. In 1889 he was a letter car- rier for the city and later died at his home at 1020 Faquier (now Bush) on August 22, 1901.

1216 E. 7th: Messorie House

Built in 1886, this is a fine brick example of Italianate architectural style designed by famed German-American architect Augustus F. Gauge. It was Charles and Marguerite Messorie’s second home. It was on the eastern fringe of city and was almost in a rural area, but the streetcar line had recently been extended out this way making it fairly easy reach of downtown. The family had large garden lots on all sides and made a living selling vegetables at the downtown farmers mar- ket. Members of the family have contin- ued to live in the house, with granddaugh- ter Orlie Messorie remaining there through the 1990’s.

Not all of the historic landmarks need to be homes or businesses. Some are commu- nity institutions whose history reveals a great deal about the development of the neighborhood. Such is the case for one of our two remaining recreation centers in the neighborhood.

1109 Margaret: Margaret Recreation Center

Here’s an example of a relatively new building whose use is for an institution that has a long history in the community. Margaret is thought to be the third oldest playground in St. Paul and was started as part of a local and national initiative called the “playground movement.” The people behind this movement felt strongly that play spaces for youth recreation were needed in the nation’s rapidly expanding urban areas.

The city bought a strip of land behind Sibley school in 1907 and from the outset activities were begun. The Margaret Ma- roons won a municipal baseball champi- onship in 1909 before there was even a building. The first shelter was built in 1910. The Margaret Boosters were organized in November 1920. They went to the city to see if they could help with the running of the playground. One early volunteer once spoke about the group’s origin: “We used to go down to the playground and find three or four kids ganged up on the director. It was getting so bad you couldn’t keep a director more than a few months. We decided to do something about it.” It seems that tough kids hang- ing out a recreation center is nothing new.

The boosters went around, “signing up new members and holding dances, bingo games, playground festivals, and, ‘mooshing’ money from local merchants to buy equipment,” one member said. By 1921 there were thirty members in the booster club. Margaret was one of only two year-round facilities in 1929.

Overindulgence not good for children

By Mary Ann Coughlin

In the month when we are reminded to be “thankful,” and when the day after Thanksgiving has for many years been the last shopping day of the year in the United States, it seems appropriate to think a little about overindulgence, why we overindulge children, and what effect overindulgence has on them. This is a very old concern. I remember from my own very early childhood the “tut-tutting” tone of conversations among my mother, grandmother, and aunts when they discussed someone who was “spoil ing” her child. I’m sure that this concern was present throughout all of the twentieth century, and I would bet people have had this notion far longer than that though they may have used different language to describe it.

When I checked through my file on this topic, I found a long list of books about overindulgence and I have read many articles in the popular press talking about the issue in the past several years, but I am going to describe some of the ideas in books and articles by authors with a Minnesota connection. In 2003 Jean Illsley Clarke, Connie Dawson, and David Bredehoft published How to Have Everything and Be a Good Person, a book written in the spirit of说明了什么是过度溺爱。Jean Clarke says it’s giving children too much, too soon and for the wrong reasons. It’s giving them too much freedom, too much attention, too much soft structure and over-nurture. Both of these would probably have been described in my grandmother’s kitchen as “coddling” or “babying,” or “expecting too little of ol’ too little.” Clarke believes that over-nurture includes hovering, intruding, or depriving a child of the opportunity to reach out, to learn new skills, to feel the thrill of achievement, or to experience consequences. She thinks that soft structure gives children too much freedom; do too much, or say too much in terms of love and boundaries; fails to insist that children contribute to the family by performing age appropriate tasks for their age and doesn’t make enough attention to children’s safety. And, by the way, she says that the so-called “TV generation” and entertainment experiences may be easier to accommodate, identify, research says the mass of serious disciplinary problems in children by over-nurture and soft structure.

What does overindulgence do to kids? Why does it cause a “good heart,” we love our kids and want them to be happy. Some of us also overindulge because we remember clearly the pain of poverty or of some other serious deprivation—a chemically dependent, disabled, or workaholic parent, and want to spare our children pain. And we sometimes do it for self-gratification to give ourselves the reward of our child’s pleasure or to “get the kid off my back.” However, we need to balance our own desire for self-indulgence with the responsibilities inherent in parenting and make choices that truly enhance our children’s growth.

What to do? Some of what to do is implied in the descriptions of what not to do. Ron L. Pitzer, another Minnesota voice who for over a decade has contributed wisdom about parenting of his articles in Young Families, the newsletter from the Extension Division at the University of Minnesota, suggests the following: Be a role model and practice what you preach. Restrict television viewing so children are less bombarded with messages about things they think they have to be popular, successful, entertained. Teach children about money, wise consumer behavior, and let them know about family finances in ways that are appropriate for their ages. Help them save and save and save. Be consistent in the rules you have for children and be sure both parents apply them. Clarke and Walsh both insist that you must be the parent in your family. And Walsh insists that you must continue to hear your children even if you are the “no” to the world and you do it for self-gratification to give ourselves the reward of our child’s pleasure or to “get the kid off my back.”

There is much more to be said and reflected upon about avoiding the temptation to overindulge. I would recommend reading either of the books I mentioned in this article or the others. But this brings me back to my mother and a different reading suggestion. For four months in the mid-August, an adult daughter Mara and I made a pilgrimage to Southwestern Minnesota. Our primary goal was to see the family farms and pastures in the southwestern part of the state where my mother was born and raised. We knew also we wanted to visit some of the other sites on our journey—the Jefferson Petroglyphs, Blue Mounds State Park, Pipestone National Monument, and Walnut Grove and Plum Creek, locations beloved to Laura Ingalls Wilder’s “Little House” books. Because we planned to go to the Plum Creek site, we listened to the recorded version of Of The Banks of Plum Creek as we drove. To the best of my knowledge, I last read the Wilder books when I was an elementary school student. As a child, my concerns were pretty unencumbered. –I just wanted an interesting story that would take me away. What a revelation it was to read those books many, many years later. Perhaps what struck me most, I was struck most with Laura Ingalls’s clarity with which Laura’s perspective as a young child is shared, the richness of characterization and the warmth and the love and the rich life is for Laura and her family in these pages. How much the family life described in these pages accomplishes what overindulgence threatens. It is clear the Wilder family is poor in economic terms. Both Ma and Pa might have taken their family structure from Clarke and Walsh. The grandparents are clear-headed. The children are clearly loved and well known by their parents. Mary and Laura have clear responsibilities-—Pa often said he did not know how he could manage without Laura as a helper. There are real and significant riches: all the nature of the journey, the desolation, the prairie, Pa’s fiddle playing and singing, Jack the dog, to name but a few.

Reading the “Little House” books again turned out for me to be a useful additional way to think about the issues of overindulgence and healthy child development. If your children are old enough, reading these books together and talking about them would accomplish much good parenting. I don’t want to go back to a carbon copy of the world of Laura Ingalls or to the styles of my parents or grandparents. Neither would you want to lose some aspects of both are deeply troubling to me. But there is much to be gained from reflection on these worlds which can help us evaluate how we want to parent and to guess what the outcomes of our choices might be. And besides, reading Laura Ingalls Wilder is rich and not overindulgent.

“Giving Voice to Our Teens”

Sign/Clean-up project a success!

Youth from the Margaret and Dayton’s Bluff Recreation Centers completed the sign/clean-up project in early October (see full article in this paper). Youth and residents alike saw this project as a victory for Dayton’s Bluff. The story also made the front page of the Pioneer Press’ “Local” section on October 10.

Way to go youth!!

A few project team members from Margaret, led by Briarica Collins (lower right), celebrated at a party to thank teens for their hard work. The party included pizza, sunnies, Wii games and basketball.

St. John’s Church of God in Christ has new name

By June Bennett

St. John’s Church of God in Christ at 1154 East 7th Street has changed its name to St. John’s Outreach Ministry. Rev. Hamilton is planning on having a buffet two days a week in his restaurant so be looking for those dates in the next issue. Also in November he is going to be serving Thanksgiving dinner to the homeless again this year. They have Wednesday night Bible Study starting at 7:00 p.m. and church every Sunday starting at 10:45 a.m.

Learn about new home ownership and personal financial topics

Community Neighborhood Housing Services and the Dayton’s Bluff Branch of Saint Paul Public Libraries present Home Club - a club for improving the home ownership experience and working on personal financial topics.

It meets the second Thursday of each month from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m. at the Dayton’s Bluff Library, 645 7th St E., Library - Room 218.

Meetings are designed to learn from experts in the field and share experience from the community. Sample topics include: how to winterize, finding low/no cost home improvement loans and financial literacy. To learn more or to find out about this month’s topics, please call 651-793-1699 or check out the blog at http://homeclub2008.blogspot.com/

Daylight Saving Time ends on Sunday November 2nd.
Remember to set your clocks back one hour.

Notice of brownfields cleanup grant application

In July 2008, the City of Saint Paul Division of Parks and Recreation acquired 1.85 acres of land adjacent to the Bruce Vento Nature Sanctuary for future use as an interpretive center. As a first step in redeveloping the area the City is applying for a brownfields cleanup grant from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. A draft of the grant will be available for public review and comment at the Dayton’s Bluff Community Council office (798 East Seventh Street) and downloadable from the Lower Phalen Creek Project website: www.phalencreek.org.

A public meeting on the redevelopment and grant proposal will be held on Thursday November 13 at 6:30 PM at the Dayton’s Bluff Community Council office – 798 East Seventh Street, St. Paul. At this meeting citizens will hear about and be able to review the draft proposal and provide comments.

Don’t forget to vote on Tuesday, November 4th. This is a really important election.
VOTE SHELDON JOHNSON
FOR STATE REPRESENTATIVE ON NOVEMBER 4!

Lower Property Taxes
Rep. Johnson believes Eastside families deserve a break from rising property taxes.
  • He fought for more state aid to St. Paul to reduce local property taxes.
  • He delivered $25 million in direct property tax relief to homeowners.
  • He worked to restore state cuts to local police and fire departments.

Affordable Health Care for All
Rep. Johnson helped make nation-leading health care reforms that will make Minnesota a healthier, more affordable place to live.
  • He helped provide health care coverage for 37,000 uninsured children.
  • He made coverage more affordable for Minnesotans.
  • He streamlined the billing process to reduce costs.
  • He focused on preventive measures to help Minnesotans live a healthy life.

Strong Communities
Rep. Johnson will continue to focus on the issues and values important to Eastside families.
  • Safer streets, expanded opportunities for early childhood education, smaller class sizes, lower college tuition, and funding for area parks and trails.

This house at 1097 Hudson Road was destroyed by fire in the early hours of October 8th. The Fire Marshall has ruled it arson. The fire reignited around 10 a.m. The house was torn down the next day.
