Midwest Special Services hosts open house

*Temperance Brennan
Special to the Forum*

Since 1949, Midwest Special Services has provided individualized programs and support to people with intellectual and physical disabilities. They work to help them reach their personal goals and achieve their full potential. The organization has been in Dayton's Bluff for quite a few years but most residents have never heard of it. That may be why they had an open house that I attended around a month ago.

Even though I have driven down East 7th Street for many years, I had never seen their campus. I found out it was at 900 Ocean Street, one block west of Johnson Parkway. You have to head north on Ocean and fairly soon you see their sign.

It's a very large, tucked-away facility, filled with various kinds of equipment, desks, and other items. During the open house people could tour the facilities and see some of the activities they offer – I witnessed weaving and silk screening.

There were two food trucks and visitors got a free ticket to eat from their choice of trucks. The St. Paul Fire Department ladder truck showed how to unroll their 50-60 foot ladder.

The tour leader explained some of the things the group offers – employment and job training, adaptive equipment, learning curriculum, facilitated exploration of creative arts, and interpersonal skills.

The organization also has a Mobile Work Crew that provides local business partners with staff for a range of services including light manufacturing, food services, janitorial, and clerical work. Just to the east of the main building is a lawn with benches, trees, flowers, and five small sculptures that are made with metal parts such as tubing wheels, springs, and other metallic items. If you missed the open house, the group is open to visitors. Their hours during the week are from 8:00 a.m. until 4:00 p.m. Call 651-778-1000 or visit mwsservices.org.

Erica Crawford

In an extremely early demonstration of civic pride, Carson Crawford took to the streets (okay, the sidewalks) to care for his neighborhood. "This was 100% his idea," says Carson's mom, Erica Crawford. "He really wanted to help clean up the streets and sidewalks. Needless to say, I was proud, not only for his creativity but also genuine interest in community."

Temperance Brennan

Midwest Special Services hosted an open house to welcome visitors to their location and to showcase some of the many activities and opportunities they have offered our community since 1949.

Greg Cosimini

The 2018 Saint Paul Classic Bike Tour was held on Sunday, September 9. These bikers are pedaling west on Burns Avenue past Obb's Sports Bar & Grill as they head towards Indian Mounds Park.

Gold Line BRT update: Mounds Boulevard options

From metrotransit.org

Neighbors gathered at the East Side Enterprise Center in Saint Paul on July 31 to comment on the location for the proposed Gold Line BRT route and station in the Mounds Boulevard area. Two options are being considered (pictured below): A route on Mounds Boulevard with bus-only lanes and a station at 3rd

Street, or a route on Maria Avenue with buses traveling on the road with regular traffic and a station at Conway Street. Neighbors who attended the meeting preferred the route and station location on Mounds Boulevard, and said the location would still be easily accessible for the neighborhood. Concerns with the Maria Avenue option included increased traffic congestion and potential impacts to pedestrians.

Thank you to all who came out to the neighborhood meetings and spoke on behalf of your community!

Grand Opening of Sepak Takraw Courts

*Seeley Booth
Forum Contributor*

The East Side made history on Saturday, September 8, with the opening of the first publicly constructed courts in the United States for the popular southeast Asian game of Sepak Takraw. There are now three courts at the Duluth and Case Recreation Center and two others in Marydale Park.

The sport is native to Southeast Asia and the name consists of two words meaning kick and ball. Sepak is the Malay word for kick and takraw is Thai for a woven ball. It is sometimes called kick volleyball, but unlike that game, here you cannot use your hands and have to get a ball over a net with your feet, head, or chest.

The Hmong community has worked for years with the St. Paul Parks and Recreation Department to finish the project. Until now, people had been playing by putting up their own nets in make-shift locations. In spite of that, athletes from St. Paul have been representing this country at international Sepak Takraw competitions. The new facility was primarily funded through donations.

There were speeches from a variety of Hmong leaders and other public officials. There was food, dances by two different groups, and several demonstrations of the game at the new facilities.

Senator Hawj celebrates grand opening of first public Sepak Takraw courts in America

*Matt Roznowski
Office of Senator Fong Hawj*

Senator Fong Hawj (DFL-St. Paul) on September 8, participated in a grand opening ceremony for new Sepak Takraw courts at the Duluth and Case Recreation Center in St. Paul – the first courts of their kind in the nation. The celebration featured officials from Sepak Takraw of the USA, Inc., the City of Saint Paul Parks and Recreation Department, and the Saint Paul Parks Conservancy, who formed a joint fundraising campaign to help finance the project.

"I am pleased that youth and adults will now have a new place to gather, be safe, and have fun in St. Paul," said Sen. Hawj. "A lot of people worked hard to turn this project into a reality, starting with community leaders who organized at the grassroots to bring this idea to our public officials. Thank you to everyone who got involved. The best Sepak Takraw players are here in our state. I know that every time Team Minnesota sets foot on the court, the other side would tremble. That is the pride I like to have for us and for Minnesota. I invite Minnesotans of all cultures to visit the recreation center, learn about the sport, and try it out yourself. This is an opportunity to bring people together to build more vibrant, inclusive communities."

Sepak Takraw, or Kato, is a traditional Southeast Asian sport that mostly resembles volleyball but requires players to use only their feet, knees, head, and chest, much like soccer. The ball is roughly 5 1/2" in diameter and woven rattan (traditionally) or synthetic rubber. Typically, two teams of three players each play on a 20' x 44' court separated by a 5' high net. An official match is won by the best of 3 games each played to 21 points.

Below is an excerpt of remarks made by Mike Hahm, Director of City of St. Paul Parks and Recreation Department, at the September 8 grand opening ceremony.

"In order to have a city that works for all, you need a recreation program that works for all. I could not be more proud of the people and professional staff that came together to build our sepak takraw courts and run facilities like this here every day."

In addition to a joint fundraising campaign, sources of financing included the NFL Super Bowl Host Committee, Minnesota Humanities Center, Saint Paul District 5 Council, Sepak Takraw of USA, Inc., and Ramsey County.

Mark Murnane: Dayton's Bluff and Florida developer and entrepreneur

*Mark Gallagher
Associate Editor*

Mark Murnane wasn't born a salesman, but he was definitely influenced by many family members who were involved in sales. In fact, his grandfather, Stanley T. Murnane, was a salesman for the Anchor-Hocking Company, a manufacturer of glass since 1905. An article on Stanley T. Murnane was published in the July 2018 issue of the Dayton's Bluff Forum.

Murnane started on the sales road in second grade when he made his first dollar. "I went down alleys and looked through people's garbage containers and pulled out items that I thought were of value," Murnane said. "My first two finds were men's top hats that were in great condition, and I brought them home.

"A couple days later, my aunt and uncle stopped by, and I offered him the hats for $.50 apiece because he wore hats on a day-to-day basis. My uncle bought both of them, so the first dollar I made was selling him those two hats."

Incidentally, those two hats were pulled from Harold and Marie Slawik's garbage can. Mr. and Mrs. Slawik were the first owners of HarMar Mall. They lived on the other side of the block from Murnane's house on Summit Ave. HarMar is a combination of their first names.

After that first sales success, Murnane continued to go up and down alleys looking for stuff. "I had a bicycle with a cart, a lawn cart that was towed behind my bicycle," he said. "I filled it up with pop and beer bottles then brought them to the store to get a refund on them. Large bottles were worth seven cents, beer bottles were a penny, and if you had a whole case, you could get a quarter, so I just kept doing that.

"A little later our family moved across the street from St. Thomas College, and all those college kids used to throw their beer bottles out by the ton — it was crazy! So some friends and I would go over and fill the cart up with beer bottles from this big dumpster and we just kept doing that. It was like heaven in a bottle!"

In the fifth grade, Murnane started cutting grass for a couple of his neighbors during the summer, and he removed snow from their sidewalks and driveways in the winter. "It grew and grew, and it expanded into Highland Park after I got my driver's license," he said. "I got more and more customers, and all of them were by word of mouth because we didn't have the internet at that time. I got up to 60 accounts, and that was by myself because I just liked to cut grass, so I worked whenever I had the chance or the time."

His dad got a magazine called Hemmings Motor News that showcased collector cars, and Murnane saw a Rolls Royce highlighted in the magazine. He wanted that car so bad and thought to himself: Someday... He cut out those little pictures of the Rolls Royce, put them in his bedroom, and thought about that car day and night — that was all he could think about. Murnane eventually got the exclusive car, which at the time was 40 years old. "I have an extremely focused mind and have financial goals I want to meet," Murnane said.

All through high school, Murnane cut grass. He received a grant to go to St. Thomas College, where his father had graduated, but the young Murnane stayed in college only two weeks. He remembers sitting in geology class, thinking: What am I ever going to do with rocks? The sun is going down, and I've got grass to cut.

"I did work at McDonald's for probably two weeks," Murnane said. "I'm just not employable; I don't work well for other people at all — I just never have.

"But I am still cutting grass while trying those other jobs, and my parents were so disappointed in me that they had these different professionals speak to me about staying in school. They said, 'You know Mark, you need to have this education at St. Thomas if you are ever going to be anything in life.' My parents had five people, including my two uncles, come over to our house and talk to me, but it just didn't work out.

View from my porch

Sage Holben
Forum Staff

I've been noticing a disappointing pattern in government decision-making. I see laws and codes being enacted by state or city, and in that process, the domino effect on the next lower levels are discounted or not at all considered. Legalization of marijuana and traffic planning are two such areas.

It is inevitable, I have been told by police, that recreational marijuana will soon be legal. I won't go into pros and cons of recreational or medicinal use or driver safety. My focus is second hand smell/smoke. Renters will have fewer rights to clean air when smoking weed, whether medicinally or recreationally, becomes legal. In reality, the Minnesota Clean Air Act does not and will not protect those who live in four-plexes or smaller. In the past, when other renters were smoking, one area renter noted, where the leases for the apartments designated her building as non-smoking, she called the off-site manager and reported the cigarette smoking (the stench was seeping into her apartment). She was told that because the renters had signed the lease, which stated 'no smoking,' no one was smoking. She had already reminded the guilty person that the building was non-smoking, and he came running and yelling at her, cornering her at the bottom of the stairs. I had a very similar experience. Unlike noise, which can be taped, there is no way to capture a smell as proof.

A neighbor, in a similar situation, started calling the police to have them visit, verifying that other renters were smoking marijuana. He was calling not for an arrest or prosecution, simply verification. After several such calls and visits, police notified his property manager and the pot smoking stopped. When recreational marijuana becomes legal, there will be no such recourse when the landlord doesn't check out the offense.

From my experience, it is bad enough to have the smell coming into my personal space from the public sidewalk, street, or cars, but hours of it inside my apartment sicken me. 'Breathing free' will not be a choice. Our senators and representatives will make the decision and never consider the collateral effect or how to curb it. I have brought up the topic with several candidates and received glazed looks or slight, amused smiles.

Traffic planning, or any neighborhood issue for that matter, is another area of decision-making that could be strengthened. A complete article WILL be forthcoming, so all I will try to keep this brief. It appears to me that some of our city employees, from the top down, need a lesson in understanding (beyond a cursory-verbal 'I understand') that every neighborhood, beyond very basic human behaviors, is not the same physically or in its residential composition, i.e. cultural and economic behaviors; that in making decisions that affect the people who live on a block or in that neighborhood, city decision-makers/information-gatherers must supplement the paperwork, the digital maps, and the computer-generated information, with an actual visit (three would be better) to the 'in-reality' neighborhood. Granted, neighborhoods change in make-up over time, and this is to be considered.

My advice is to get out of your car, talk with some neighbors and ask their opinions of the potential changes. BUT, if you are so bold as to get out of your office: talk with residents ahead of time and learn when the most people are out and about, when the most vehicle and foot traffic use intersections and roadways, when is the block the most active. VISIT the neighborhood at an ACTIVE time, sit on a porch with a neighbor or two and OBSERVE for more than five minutes... could 45 minutes be worth the city's time in making an informed decision? How would residents inform you? What do they see? They don't see things the same; they see activity at different times; they perceive activity from different personal perspectives; what do they suggest? I'll bet it'll be different than the dated manual of standards your department is using.

In answer to traffic complaints in my neighborhood, at least three different departments have come for a walk- or run-through around 10:00 a.m. or 11:00 a.m. And 1:00 or 2:00 in the afternoon. These are generally very quiet, almost desolate times of day on Fourth Street. Area drug dealers are not yet up and out, kids are in school or babysitting inside, and employed people are at their job sites. Fewer vehicles are cutting through the intersection; yet city employees will tell us they visited the area and saw no problems. To our knowledge, only one city employee came at a realistic time to check out a problem. She talked with two neighbors to get a background; then visited two ends of the area, observing a primary area for about half to three quarters of an hour to watch the activity, asking questions of residents. To catch the liveliest activity of our neighborhood, after department staff hours, i.e. from 5:30 p.m. on would be necessary. It doesn't often happen that city employees are willing to reschedule their work schedules to visit our neighborhood in 'real time.'

You can (anonymously) see the world in action from my corner porch; with more realism than sitting in a City of St. Paul vehicle, or a marked squad car on the corner filled with unreal expectations. We would welcome you.

Perhaps we could look at updating the traffic signage standards? Habits of drivers have changed in the last 10-15 years - let's not rely on old norms. Consider this: My younger friends remind me that they want to get from point A to point B... fast. Stoplights take too long. Stop signs offer more of a suggestion than a demand. I see many drivers with a smart phone on the steering wheel. When they come to an intersection, they don't look left or right (beyond, perhaps, a slight tweak of the head); the driver looks up (maybe) from the phone and straight ahead. Why not place the stop sign, or other 'suggestion' in the middle of the intersection as much of Great Britain has been doing? Perhaps drivers will have a better chance of 'seeing?'

Mark Murnane

"Needless to say, my parents were a little upset because they had some money just sitting there for my education, but I just never cared for school and that was the extent of my college education. I did no more schooling."

Murnane's first investment (the first time he actually paid for a product) was a portable crank-up Victrola record player he bought at an estate sale before he started driving. He paid nine dollars for the record player, took it to an antique shop, and sold it for $16. That was Murnane's first actual cash investment, but there were many products before the Victrola that he had gotten for free: he would find old chests and antique items to bring home, give them a coat of paint, and sell them in the Thrifties.

Mark Gallagher

Mark Murnane, Dayton's Bluff and Florida developer and entrepreneur.

In 1986, Murnane started a real estate management company, and started managing a 20-unit apartment building. He bought a house in Dayton's Bluff, moved there, and started investing in the neighborhood. "Our management company started buying property in Dayton's Bluff," Murnane said, "which were mostly single-family homes, duplexes, and some apartment buildings.

"We worked with the Historic Dayton's Bluff Association and Upper Swede Hollow Neighborhoods Association and bought a lot of HUD houses, foreclosures, and vacant buildings that were registered with the City of St. Paul. Our management company brought most of them from disrepair to livable conditions."

In addition to the house Murnane and his wife, Linda, own in Dayton's Bluff, they also had a house and own a resort in Cape Coral, Florida, a city in which there are 400 miles of canals — more than in Venice, Italy. A couple of years ago, they moved to Fort Meyer, Florida, because they wanted an old house that was built on an acreage.

"My wife and I have the resort hotel in Florida and also restore houses there but on a much smaller scale than we did in Dayton's Bluff," Murnane said. "We basically flip the houses, and I don't have a crew there because my wife and I do most of the work ourselves — it's more of a hobby for us.

"We have a management company there called MarLin Management of Minnesota, which is a little different variation of what we have here in Minnesota. We have apartment buildings, two fourplexes, three houses, and the resort hotel in Florida.

"My fondest memory of my grandfather (Stanley T. Murnane) is just going over to his house," Mark said, "and watching Twins baseball with him. That was totally, totally his pastime, just sitting in the living room. My dad and I were over at my grandfather's house every Saturday.

"He didn't like the sportscasters on the television, so the TV was on, but the sound came out of the radio because he liked the sportscasters on the radio. Yeah, it was a black and white console TV, and I could never figure it out — why doesn't this knob turn the sound down? My grandfather always had this little Panasonic radio with the antenna going up, so that was very funny to us."

Murnane's grandfather taught him the process of selling: you have to sell yourself to your prospective customer, and their satisfaction in the transaction is always your number one priority. "My grandfather always said that a salesman should put customer satisfaction above the financial part of the business in order to have a happy customer," Murnane said. "The customer was more important to him than the revenue part."

Mark Murnane has taken his grandfather's advice to heart. "We have people who like to sew come from Canada during the winter and stay at our resort for four weeks," he said. "When they get to their rooms, they will have a sewing machine there. When those same people come to our resort the next year, there will again be a sewing machine in their room.

"So that's what my grandfather was always telling me — customer satisfaction — that's what it's all about, and the way you keep people coming back."

Mark Murnane has been happily married for 30 years, and he and his wife, Linda, have two children. Their daughter, Morgan, is 29, and their son, Kyle, is 27. Kyle dabbles in real estate, but his primary job is running the hotel. Murnane bought his first apartment building when he was 23, and Kyle bought his first apartment building when he was also 23, so Kyle is following in his dad's footsteps.

No matter how adamantly one might search
There will always be new art to experience
Contemporary or not
There will always be
A painting that has yet to give perspective

A statue that has yet to astound
A song that has yet to slap and tickle your soul
Art that has yet to imprint upon your selfdom
The collection of earthly art ensures
That we will always have inspiration
If we so choose to seek it.

TAMALLI

990 Payne Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55130

Monday: Closed
Tuesday-Sunday: 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

For catering: Tamallimn@gmail.com

I had previously visited the site of the small restaurant inside 990 Payne Avenue. When I was there the first time, it was a Salvadorian spot featuring pupusas and other traditional foods. It later housed Hamburguesa El Gordo, which specialized in the fattest hamburgers I had ever seen. For two months now it has been TAMALLI, offering "authentic Mexican tamales." There are other dining options in the large area, so each one shares the décor and seating which is tables and booths. There was a variety of tamales—green tamales with chicken, red tamales filled with pork, Rajas tamales featuring jalapenos and cheese, a pineapple tamale, and a black bean tamale that is vegan.

There are lots of other kinds of food, most having touches of Latino cuisine influence. There are hamburgers such as Hamburguesas Mexicana with mozzarella cheese and jalapeno aioli, Hawaiian burgers that add bacon and pineapple, as well as a kids mini hamburger.

How about the so-called American hot dogs? Here you can find sencillo, jocho, and El perro varieties. Under the menu category you can find Mexico. It features tande tamal oaque and oxageno with chicken whose origins are in the Oaxacan area of Mexico.

There is no table service offered, you order at the counter and are signaled when your food is ready. When I approached, I saw a sign that said "The Special Del Dia" (special of the day was Pambozos). Since it was not on any of the computerized menu boards and I might not get another chance to sample it, I went for it. The dish is made of Mexican white bread, a huge bun that is dipped in a red pepper sauce that gives it a reddish tint, filled with potato, cheese, chorizo, lettuce, and onions, then cooked until crispy. Since the special included a soft drink, I grabbed a Coke which the can said was the "original taste."

They offer a variety of other soft drinks as well as coffee, rice with milk, and champurrado, which is a warm chocolate-based thick drink that is based on a corn dough sometimes flavored with cinnamon.

On Saturdays and Sundays they make tepache bienfrio, a cool drink made of slightly fermented pineapple and other spices. TAMALLI does not have beer or wine, but the adjacent Mexican steak house can provide those libations if desired.

Vianey Rameriz is the owner and operator. She has been working in the food industry for 13 years and finally decided she was tired of working for others. She learned to cook most of the recipes of her mother who grew up in Oaxaca and lived in Mexico City.

There is a parking lot on the east side of the building. If you are hosting a meeting or party, TAMALLI offers catering.

Mounds Theatre Memories – Life in the Depression

James P. Perrier
Special to the Forum

This short memoir is an attempt to share some of the feelings I have for "The Mounds."

At one time there was a hamburger shop directly across the street from the theater as well as Johnson's grocers up on the corner. Many of my childhood friends once lived on that same side of the street to the west near Cypress and Forest. Their homes were taken for the freeway. Depression or no Depression, those were fascinating times for kids.

I was driving back to my home in South Minneapolis after attending the funeral of an old friend in Amery, Wisconsin. My route coming into St. Paul along I-94 took me through what reminds me of a scar, that mile-long ditch from Johnson Parkway to the Third Street bridge that the highway department gouged out of my old neighborhood during the creation of the interstate system back in the 1950s. I suppose it's true that you can't relive the past, but it's been 60 years since our family moved away and I still sometimes give in to the impulse to pull off the freeway and visit once again the neighborhood where I grew up, slowly cruising the streets, matching houses with the names of the families that used to live there back in the '30s and '40s.

Most of the streets still have the same names that they had back then except for Hastings (renamed Hudson Road) and Wilson, which used to be Hudson Avenue.

My family lived in the home that my dad had built in 1916 at 947 Wakefield Avenue, just three doors west of the big old Wakefield home, which gave the street its name. My Dad was a railroad man and my mother a housewife and mother to five boys and one girl.

"The Bluff," as it was known, was a great place for a kid to grow up. A few blocks to the east, right behind the city dump, were the brickyards - an open area which pretty well marked the eastern boundary of the city. If you loved skiing and sliding or tobogganing, it was a hilly paradise. If team sports were your favorite activities you had only to walk a few blocks west to reach the Tuxedo playground near Maria and Hastings. The crown jewel of the area was Indian Mounds Park, sitting atop the bluffs that overlooked the Mississippi River and the airport.

The views were spectacular in three directions. You didn't have far to go to reach Mounds Park Elementary School. It was just a few blocks to the north on McLean and could boast of having an angel watching over its kindergarten. Her name was Miss Ambler. I spent grades 1 through 8 at St. John's Parochial School on Fifth and Forest where classmates named McLaughlin, Burns, and O'Connell shared my classroom. If your folks were German they might have preferred Sacred Heart Grade School also on Fifth, just two blocks west of St.

Johns.

The entertainment center for the neighborhood was the Mounds Theatre on Hastings Avenue between Earl and Cypress. It shared the block with Brozek's Grocery to the west and Basta's Bakery, Olson's Department Store, and Otto's Drug Store to the east.

In those years before television, the Mounds was everyone's full-service provider. The bill changed three times a week with showings at 7:00 and 9:00 each evening and matinees on Saturday and Sunday. Many of the theatre's customers attended more than once a week. There were daily advertisements in the newspaper and playbills at your doorstep every Saturday morning. My three older brothers were among the lucky teenagers who got to deliver those playbills in exchange for free passes to the movies. As my brother Gene now explains it, there were three, four, and seven pass routes with two kids sharing a route, each taking one side of the street.

My brother, Gene, still remembers the winter day when he and his friends were sliding near the Mounds Park ski jump. They were skiing down the big jump's landing hill on simple skis, which were held on by a single leather strap and reinforced by a large rubber band cut from an automobile inner tube.

Before good sense could prevail Gene was hurtling down the scaffold and off into the air where the wind caught his skis and pointed them in every direction except straight ahead. When he finally stopped bouncing and careening through the shrubbery he was a bloody mess of cuts and bruises.

The 1930s were depression years and the unemployment rate was near 20%. Even if you were lucky enough to have a job in those days you might still have to take a wage cut of 10% or more to hold that job. Since the neighborhood around the Mounds Theatre was considered to be a "lunch buckets" or blue-collar area, there wasn't a great deal of loose money or what might now be called "discretionary income" floating around. A $.15 ticket to the movies might seem insignificant now, but in the prewar years of the 1930s, a skilled aircraft mechanic at the St. Paul airport was considered to be well compensated making $.16 an hour.
