Minnesota to Begin Offering COVID Vaccines to Those Over Age of 65

Minnesota Community Care

Minnesota Community Care, the state’s largest federally qualified health center, has been given the go-ahead to begin offering COVID vaccines to Minnesotans over the age of 65, whether or not they are current patients.

Appointments are necessary. Call 651-602-7500 to make your appointment. Walk-ins are not accepted at this time. Vaccinations will be given Mondays through Fridays from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Vaccinations are free for all.

Getting community-based health clinics (CHCs) involved in the vaccine rollout is essential for ensuring the vaccine goes to the populations most impacted by COVID. Throughout the pandemic, CHCs have consistently experienced higher positivity rates than their counterparts. For example, of all the Latino patients tested at Minnesota Community Care’s testing sites between March and July 2020, 54% were positive, almost eight times greater than the 7% of white patients that were tested.

In addition, the Minnesota Community Care is also able to help vaccinate a largely transient population that generally does not have access to stable housing, much less the computers necessary to schedule appointments at many other sites.

VCs can also address the vaccine hesitancy that is more common among populations of color. Allowing a patient to receive the vaccine from a provider they trust is critical for getting buy-in.

Young Artists Initiative presents “2021: A Virtual Performance”

Mandy Olson
Forum Staff

Chances are if you’ve put a flyer on your doorknob, I’ve read it. Grass roots marketing is a practice I firmly believe in. The flyer promoting community theater made it to my “think about later pile”. When I asked my daughter if she was interested in participating, I received a very excited, “Yes!”

Youth Artist Initiative (YAI) is a non-profit theater company located on the East Side of Saint Paul with a mission to facilitate a “creative and engaged community where young people flourish – on and off the stage.”

The 2021 Virtual Performance I’ve been listening to unfold as I quietly cook dinner in my kitchen features Saint Paul youth performing solo creative pieces, like monologues, comedic acts, or spoken word poetry while working on several group songs. YAI’s group of artistic and musical directors work with kids ranging in age from eight to 18 via weekly Zoom meetings – both in a large group and one-on-one in small breakout rooms. The director’s core values of respect, fostering community, and cultivating a safe inclusive environment ooze positivity where children can be creative and learn to perform and interact. This is something any parent can support. My shy minion has mustered up the courage to sing to her bear, Flower, first and is now comfortable singing both with me and her group on Zoom.

Listening to my daughter find her voice was an experience that I didn’t know I needed.

I met with YAI director Matthew and his wife Robin to chat about the joys and challenges of continuing to build their village of creative youth during a global pandemic. While in-person workshops and practices are not an option right now, like many other live performing groups, YAI has pivoted to video chats to continue their mission of providing top-notch programming to engage Saint Paul’s often underserved youth in need of positive creative outlets where they can shine.

Matthew’s most cherished moments are seeing children develop the confidence, not only for performing but persuing their dreams outside of theater. For youngsters new to performing like my daughter, YAI creates and facilitates a safe, inclusive environment where kids can freely move out of their comfort zones as they try out new skills and implement them in performance. Before we know it, Saint Paul’s youth will be running the show, and it’s important as stewards of our community to give kids the empowerment, confidence, and empathy necessary to guide our diverse neighborhood in exciting new directions. For any parent interested in YAI, Matthew encourages you to reach out to him directly at matthew@youngartistsmn.org.

To purchase tickets for the upcoming performance which will be broadcast on YouTube March 4 through 7, visit youngartistsmn.org/virtual2021/.

Recalling Roy Voss

1936-2021

Steve Trimble
Forum Staff

Roy Voss recently passed away at the age of 85 years old. He was a wonderful local legend, at least for those with cars. Or kids who always claimed, “There’s no one who can fill a bike tire better than Roy.” He did it free of charge.

He was born in Lyon County in rural Minnesota and came to St. Paul in 1953 looking for job opportunities. He started working at the service station on Third and Maria. In 1956 he bought it from its owners, and it became Roy’s 66, the way it still lists in the phone book and on-line. There was gas to sell but Roy said in an article I wrote for The Forum in June 1991, doing repair was an important part of the income. Roy also said that at the time it was hard for smaller businesses because the newer high-tech manufacturing makes it hard to work on because the cars’ new tools and equipment were expensive.

Over the years, many members of the Voss family worked there and once they grew up, they could take over. Mike, Roy’s son and today’s owner, bought the establishment. In 1996 Roy decided to retire to what had been his Aitkin County vacation home. He would come back to St. Paul from time to time to see family and old friends. He will be missed and remembered.

East 6th Street Test
Envisioning a safer, calmer, and better neighborhood

Matej Mazanec and Jane Prince
Special to the Forum

Many Dayton’s Bluff neighbors probably remember the test closure of East 6th Street that occurred in the summer of 2018. The test was conducted by Public Works at the request of neighbors, whose street begins at the end of a freeway off ramp. The test was informed by decades’ worth of data, complaints, and concerns about the reckless and dangerous driving pouring into the East Side from Interstate 94.

The study examined what would happen if East 6th Street were closed between Maria and Mounds Boulevard; it looked at where the traffic went and what street benefited from reduced traffic. Upon conclusion of the study, the data showed that two-thirds of the displaced traffic went to East 7th Street, our area’s major commercial corridor and one-third went to East 3rd Street. The test also showed that the average traffic volume on several adjacent neighborhood streets was lowered by triple digits of cars per day.

In terms of data, the study showed that the closure was successful in moving a large amount of cut-through traffic onto East 7th Street, increasing visibility for businesses, while minimizing the traffic on neighboring residential streets.

From public meetings and a review of survey results, resident reactions were mixed. Because the test lasted only two or three weeks, many neighbors never got used to rerouting their commute, taking them extra time to get where they were going. And from those reactions, including those that were favorable, came ideas that would have less impact on Metro State University and businesses at East 6th and Maria Streets.

Once the City of St Paul adopted new criteria for street investments in 2019, neighbors reopened the discussion with Jane’s office. Under that new standard, city streets are to be designed to serve pedestrians first, bicycles second, public transportation third, and cars traffic last. Ushering in that change is new Public Works Director Sean Kershaw, who though not a traffic engineer, has accepted the role of lead problem-solver between Saint Paul residents and his team of dedicated public works professionals.

After a walking tour with neighbors, Sean went back to consult with his team. Before year’s end, he and his team proposed a new test that more carefully targets traffic calming to residential streets and all but eliminates impacts on Metro State, Yoerg Brewing Company, and Deitz-Kane Insurance Agency.

The 60-day test that is currently proposed to begin this April, will place a temporary diagonal traffic diverter in the intersection of East 6th Street and Bates Ave. That diverter will run from corner to corner, directing eastbound vehicles from East 6th to the East 7th commercial corridor. Conversely, westbound traffic on East 6th Street will be directed south on Bates to East 3rd Street.

The test will additionally focus attention on the problematic four-way stop at Bates and East 4th St, where neighbors have worked diligently for a decade to make their neighborhood safer for all the children who live there. Various engineering devices are under consideration and will be installed simultaneously with the diverter on East Sixth.

This time around, the test will also work to reduce driver confusion by including signage directing westbound vehicles to East 7th to access Mounds Blvd and the interstate.

We will have several methods during and after the test to gauge public reaction to the test, to see how this new test is working for you. Meanwhile, if you have questions, you can reach out to Jane’s Ward 7 office at ward7@ci.stpaul.mn.us. Lots more information will be available in the coming weeks, to help you prepare for this exciting traffic calming experiment.

Our goal for this community — like yours probably is for your neighborhood — is to make Dayton’s Bluff safer, calmer, and more livable for all our residents, businesses, and visitors.
Building Back Better

Clara Martin
Forum Staff

The Dayton Bluff community, along with other communities in a wintry wonderland, looks forward to the beginning of spring. This edition of the Dayton’s Bluff District Forum is another reminder of our changing seasons: The end of tax season, folks out and about looking at homes for sale, hopefulness about kicking the virus to the curb, celebrations of special anniversaries, restaurants and bars opening, and the promise of more to come about yard work and gardening.

This change in seasons begs the question: “What can I change and what can I do better”? Homeowners might ask how they can beautify their landscaping, improve their home efficiency, or simply improve their home’s curb appeal. Then there are the personal questions about pumping up exercise routines, taking in more natural vitamin D, going on day trips or any road trip to enjoy our state or our country: Some thing we’ve missed with all this isolation and quarantining. Change is clearly on our minds, especially here in Minnesota when seasons are an easily recognizable transition.

Whether making changes to ourselves and our personal lives; making our living situation different and/or better; building a life after loss; recreating yourself after a career change; or physically rehabilitating after a health crisis, the goal is to build on what you had or have been given, but make it better than before. Necessity for changes may be evident to us, but sometimes we don’t know where to begin. At times, the road to our goals feels like a slog and the temptation may be to give up, give in, set aside for another time, or simply quit. That is definitely a choice, but there may be better options.

The key to building back and building back better is to surround yourself with people who can lend support in your effort. Getting outside more often might be easier if you ask someone to join in. A house repair might seem less daunting if you engage an expert or handy person in advice. Rehab due to a physical ailment oftentimes requires therapists to set you in the direction of healing; loss of a partner due to death or divorce often requires a mental health expert, a clergy person, friends and family; while a career change might be bolstered by any number of experts in your field of choice. Life teaches us that we don’t have to go it alone in order to reach our goals. Building back better, as a goal, means we want to be stronger than we were. We want to be better than we were. We want to dig deep inside ourselves and find the strength to make a better life so we can look back when we’re older and know we did the best we could, with a whole lot of help. Maybe we made a better life for ourselves, but maybe we built back better for our children. Whatever the reason, building back better strengthens our spirit and also that of those around us.

"Build back better" is a national slogan now, but it can be our personal slogan, as well. The pandemic has taken many of our activities and relationships away from us but we can pledge to build them back better in due time. We can make plans now and decide how we will do that — commit to building back better. We have the capability to give ourselves a much-needed shot in the arm in order to make our lives better.

Swede Hollow: A Series

The Work Begins

Karín DuPaul
Forum Staff

Efforts to clean up and restore Swede Hollow to its natural habitat began in the 1970s. The project involved many key players, including members of the Saint Paul Parks Department who believed in the project to restore the hollow. The Saint Paul Garden Club, led by Olivia Irvine Dodge, worked with the city parks department to form the Swede Hollow Task Force in developing plans for what was to become Swede Hollow Park.

As a Dayton’s Bluff resident, I volunteered to be a part of the task force. Other key early members included George Hrynewych, President of the Dayton’s Bluff Community Council, Joyce Cassidy from the Railroad Island neighborhood, and Buzz Wilson, a member of the District 5 Payne Phalen Planning District. Many city staff members and other interested citizens became involved in the project over time as well.

Olivia Dodge was a member of one of the key political and business dynasties in St. Paul’s history. Olivia’s passion was engaging young people to develop a reverence for nature. She started the Dodge Nature Center in West Saint Paul, the Irvine Nature Center in Baltimore, Maryland, and the Preschool at the Dodge Nature Center. To learn more about the Dodge Nature Center go to dodgenaturecenter.org and the Dodge Nature Center explorea.org/.

In 1965, Olivia Dodge and her sister Clotilde donated their old family home at 1006 Summit Avenue to the state of Minnesota to become the official home of the Minnesota governor. The governor’s home is a beautiful mansion, located not too far from the state capital.

Mrs. Irvine Dodge was an outstanding leader of our group who really loved Swede Hollow and worked to see that we had the support and the energy to keep this effort going. Many of the early Task Force meetings were held at Mrs. Dodge’s beautiful home in West Saint Paul.

Mrs. Dodge was a very important person in my life. She helped me discover my own passion and her example was key to my work over the years in my work as community organizer and love for Swede Hollow. Her example and help with the Swede Hollow Park led my daughter Angela and me to dedicate our book, The Life of Swede Hollow, to her and Margaret Hamm Kelley, one of the granddaughters of the Theodore Hamm family. Mrs. Kelley helped me understand and research the history of Swede Hollow and the Hamm family and Brewery. We also chose to honor “everyone who ever lived in Swede Hollow,” to honor all those who had begun their Minnesota lives in Swede Hollow.

Another member of the Task Force was Jody Martinez, a student at the U of M and an intern at Saint Paul Parks Department. Jody did a lot of the early planning and design for Swede Hollow Park. One important contribution from Jody was in creating a large box model of Swede Hollow which was featured at the “Festiv-al on the Bluff” event in Mounds Park that summer. It helped people who did not know much about Swede Hollow Park learn about it. Jody went on to work at Saint Paul Parks and Recreation until she retired several years ago.

At one early hearing at City Hall about funding the Swede Hollow development, Jim Sazesich and Steve Trimble, well-known historians, and a number of others including me, spoke in favor of moving the development of Swede Hollow forward. It was a challenge to make the case for Swede Hollow at a time when city leaders were grappling with serious budgetary issues relating to the basic health and well-being of our citizens. However, the mayor made it clear in his remarks after I spoke that parks like Swede Hollow were also very important to the well-being of our communities.

At one of the early meetings, we learned that the Saint Paul Police Department was against the development of Swede Hollow into a park. This wasn’t because of the park itself, but because young people were holding large, unchaperoned parties in the hollow. This led to drug use and creating other problems for the police. Once we became aware of this danger, we were able to marshal the neighbors around Swede Hollow to be more vigilant about unauthorized activities going on in the park. Mrs. Dodge, with help from others, worked to convince the Chief of Police to support our work to revitalize Swede Hollow.

I became a member of the Dayton’s Bluff Community Council and at the time, I was able to get support from neighbors to organize clean-up projects for Swede Hollow. For me, this was a new adventure. The first year we collected over 130 tires, old stoves, old washing machines, and other types of refuse. Members of our neighborhood group, the Upper Swede Hollow Neighborhood Association, continued these annual spring clean ups of Swede Hollow. In more recent years the St. Paul Parks Department has hosted annual Spring Cleanups for all the parks in Saint Paul. Our Swede Hollow clean ups are now a regular part of the annual Saint Paul Parks Department Clean Up Day projects.

Next month’s Swede Hollow article will be about the railroad that for so many years ran through Swede Hollow.

The Giesen-Hauser House

Mark Gallagher
Associate Editor

The Giesen-Hauser House — a prominent, redbrick and sandstone mansion — is situated on the crest of a wooded, one-acre plot located at 827 Mounds Street in the Dayton’s Bluff neighborhood of St. Paul. The Queen Anne style house was first listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1983. The house reaches up two and a half stories and has a roof engineered with a series of complex gables and smaller hip roofs accented by modest dormers and tall chimneys.

In 1891, St. Paul architect Albert Zschocke (1859-1892) was commissioned to design and build a family residence for Peter and Mary Giesen in a stylish and popular section of the Dayton’s Bluff community. The house overlooking St. Paul is one of the only surviving works of the local architect.

“The Giesens, including three of the four sons, moved in. However, they lived in the house for a relatively short time for such an ambitious project. In 1907, the Giesens sold the house and the family moved to a more modest house, closer to the business, at 184 Summit Avenue.

“There would have been plenty of room, even if they had all moved in with family and an entourage of servants. The house has an expansive, open, wrap-around porch with classical columns, a solarium, and a corner observation tower crowned by an octagonal spire above an open, belfly-like observation porch. The first floor alone is nearly 2,200 square feet. The house is large enough that, for a number of years before its present owners bought and began rehabilitating it, it was an apartment building with seven units.”

Born and educated in Germany, Zschocke came to the United States in 1882. He started his career as an architect and launched his business in St. Paul in 1885. In addition to designing and building private residences, Zschocke also drew up the plans and built apartment buildings, hotels, schools, and churches. Unfortunately, Zschocke’s dynamic, architectural career was short-lived — he died at the age of thirty-three.

A friend of mine, David Minea, recently told me about an interesting connection to single-family residence. They are gradually restoring the interior floor plan to its original layout.

The home at 654 East 4th is now on the market. It isn’t historic because it was in the Dayton’s Bluff Historic District, even though it is. Instead, it has an interesting story that makes it memorable. At least for cinema buffs. Two popular movies used the structure as a setting.

The neighborhood was most featured in That Was Then, This Is Now. It was produced by Media Ventures of Minneapolis and Beverly Hills, California. It was the tale of two teen age boys — one of them a young Emillio Estevez — and his movie family lived in Dayton’s Bluff at 654 East 4th Street. The well-known actor Morgan Freeman also had a main role in the movie.

One of the directors said that the house “fit the image and the feel of the script”. Shooting began August 20 and was set to be completed in early October. In addition to the house, locations include Hudson Road, St. John’s Hospital, Spanky’s Bar, and other St. Paul sites.

There was an earlier movie made by the same production group, Purple Rain, starring local legend Prince that was also partly set in Dayton’s Bluff. In fact, there were scenes at 654 East Fourth.

So this may be your chance to own a house with a heritage and a great view of downtown. You could have Emillio Estevez movie night and/or a Prince music night on the front lawn.

Minnesota China Garden Society Seeks Additional Funds

The St. Paul-Changsha, China Friendship Garden, located in Phalen Park, St. Paul, is seeking additional funds to complete Phase I of the garden construction and begin Phase II. The Garden will require $160,000 to complete Phase I.

The Minnesota China Friendship Garden Society (MCFGS) began a New Year Matching Gift Challenge to raise funds from December 22, 2020 to February 28, 2021. The state of Minnesota through its state Legacy and Bonding funds and private donors have provided close to $1 million restricted for Phase II, some of which must be spent by 2022. MCFGS is working with the St. Paul Department of Parks & Recreation, the Phalen Park neighborhood, and the Twin Cities Hmong and Chinese communities to inform the design and build the garden. In Changsha China, St. Paul’s sister city, the Hunan Jianke architectural firm continues to provide design direction for the garden using Chinese building and garden principals.

The China Friendship Garden began in 2011 with funding for the design received in 2015. Phase I included a Hmong Heritage Wall, the Xiang Jiang Pavilion, plazas, rock work, and the west entrance Archway Gate. Other work to be completed in Phase I include plant more trees, shrubs and flowers; creating and installing artistic calligraphy stones; and installing a seven-ton China Garden naming stone.

Founders, board members, and advisors have pledged $76,850, and when matched by other donations at the end of February, Phase I will be completed and Phase II can begin. Phase II will include a Hmong Plaza, extension of the Pavilion garden to the water’s edge, a donor wall, the east entrance Moon Gate, and the Chinese Moon Bridge.

Donations of any size are welcome and will be doubled to match. Donations at the $1,000, $5,000, and $10,000 levels will qualify the donor to be a Groundbreaker and will be recognized on the donor wall. All donations will be used to complete Phase I and begin Phase II.

Anyone who wishes to visit the China Friendship Garden may go to 1640 Phalen Drive, Phalen Park, St. Paul, Minnesota. Log on to tube.com/watch?v=t3hbHgT9il4&feature+emblogo to see a video of the China Friendship Garden. Photos of the various garden structures are at the MCFGS website: mncchinagarden.org/st-paul-changsha/.

My friend Jason and I were comparing weather between his home in Pennsylvania and my corner of Fourth and Bates. As he mentioned a problematic intersection near his home, I watched an extra long FedEx Ground truck come down the Fourth Street hill, turn south onto Bates to the center of the block, then back up through the four-way stop intersection at a good clip, without pausing, and with no safety beeper. I thought he was parking on the north side of the intersection, but he drove back up Fourth and then to Third, then returned to Bates from Third. The driver didn’t slow as he turned west on Fourth and again ignored the several posted 20mph suggestions on our streets. When I see these large trucks and semis drive through our narrow, car-lined residential street, I see-saw between hoping I hear a crash, proving a point; or praying that no car door swings open, no car backs out of a drive, and no child or adult steps out from between the solid row of vehicles.

UPS is not much better than FedEx. We once had a great UPS driver, Adam, who knew the residents here, he knew where to stow packages out of sight, and was so proud of his several youths, who stole several packages. Adam suffered slight injury, but regained possession of his truck. Adam also delivered to Metro State University Library where I worked. He enjoyed this area. He explained to me the UPS restrictions on speed, turns, intersections, etc., countered with the UPS expectations of minimizing time, time, TIME! And how drivers were tracked for time and stops. Yet, the job seemed personal to him, and he glowed when talking of his family. Perhaps that personal connection is what is missing in the FedEx drivers and other drivers whose only getting from point A to point B, run the four-way stop signs, not considering the pedestrians, other vehicles, car doors suddenly opening, and the expectation of ice, or having to swerve for potholes, and the unexpected person stepping out suddenly from between parked cars. Expendable. Collateral damage. We get too many extra-long semi trucks, Syco, Unifi, Amcon, I can check my tally book for more. I have contacted FedEx through Facebook and have called, too many times, their 1-800-463-3339 number. It used to be that a customer service person would talk with me. Then it was a human without a human response. I keep being asked for the vehicle number or license. I repeat the driver was going too fast for me to get the plate #, the vehicle number is small and not visually obvious. The FedEx person doesn’t admit to trucks having GPS. I have been asked for the destination address of the truck. How the BLEEP would I know where the driver is delivering?!! I’ve griped about this intersection many times in the past. Yes, my findings are anecdotal; but they are real, and they are documented. Also, what the city has electronically studied in the past doesn’t necessarily reflect the actual problem. Now, besides the past and outdated ‘norm’, we are seeing drivers who appear more aggressive in their speed, still text while driving, and seem oblivious to inattentive pedestrians. Drivers seem angrier (yes, lack of income, social needs not being met, and then, WOW! a street is blocked off or another driver ticks you off! Drivers continue to ignore safety signage, dislike sharing the road, and seem not to recognize humans as breathing, walking forms made up of blood, muscle and bones who cannot easily stand being hit by a couple tons of metal or being flung around within a crushed metal four-wheeled container.

Please, when you’re behind the wheel, give ALL your attention to what is happening on the street and at the curb. When you come to a full stop, don’t just turn your head right and left, but actually see what is in your view. There is a difference between looking and seeing...but that’s another article...if one lives to read it.
