Unstable Memories

Pinhole Photography by Benjamin Mason

Mandy Okonek

Memories are subjective, finite wisps of emotion that shape our collective life experience. The instability of memories is rooted in our own bias of observation and cognition. It’s impossible for two people to see the same things or to experience the same events with similar clarity.

According to my favorite Metro State Psych Professor Gary Starr, the notion of photographic memory is a complete falsehood. It is a myth local artist and co-director of Art in the Hollow Benjamin Mason aims to unpack through his series of pinhole photographs. Benjamin mimicked the chaotic dissonance of memory with a one-inch hole cut into the lens cap of his Nikon DSLR camera that intentionally altered the perception of his images, producing photos that were layered with emotional intensity. His series purposely plays with the illusion of memory as an abstraction.

“I have lived down the block from Benjamin for over a decade and my journey through his images arranged according to the themes of Ghosts, Epochs, Environments, Nostalgia, Schemes, and Amnesia felt oddly familiar. Many of Benjamin’s photos took me to places in our Dayton’s Bluff Neighborhood that I walk by daily, however, the effect of his pinhole photography technique was other-worldly and I felt like I was wandering through a lucid dream. In a prepared artist statement, Benjamin explains his foray into photography:

“I stumbled into pinhole photography while trying to decide how to generate images for a novel I was publishing. The Masque and the Dagger. I learned I could use a camera’s body cap, a drill, a pin, some foam, and a can of Cherry Coke to create a pinhole lens for my digital camera. I started experimenting with it and loved the surreal outlook of the images. It’s become rare for me to affix an ordinary lens to my DSLR.”

Through his carefully crafted arrangement of photographs, Benjamin proves he is also an adept visual storyteller. He was the featured artist of the month at local gallery ArT@967 where his photography collection titled Unstable Memories was on exhibit this March.

ArT@967 is a gallery and studio space located at, you guessed it, 967 Payne Ave. That large brick building with the big rectangle windows facing the street has been transformed into a destination Art Gallery and studio space by curator Stephan Kistler. Stephan grew up in Switzerland exchanging the Alps for the Bluffs. His ability to capture the picturesque beauty of our natural world was evident in a collection of his photographs displayed in a separate room.

The space at 967 Payne has art around every corner and in the basement. Kistler’s excitement for our burgeoning art scene in Saint Paul is contagious and he is already hard at work promoting his next exhibit, Colors of Spring, just in time for the vibrant Holi holiday.

Remembering George Hrynewych

Steve Trimble

The long-time resident of Dayton’s Bluff passed away on February 14, 2022, at the age of 81. He was a long-time neighborhood resident and activist who lived on McLean Street. George Volodymyr Hrynewych grew up in the heart of Chicago’s large Ukrainian community. He graduated from Wells High School. After he graduated, and with his interest in art, he attended the University of Chicago to study art. That ended when he was drafted into the Army in 1961 and served two years in Germany. He returned to Chicago working at an electric enterprise and transferred to St. Paul. He eventually caught on with the railroad management on Burlington Northern Railroad.

He married Margaret Simpson (Joe) and Ross (Dawn) and his children, Anya, Nina and grandchildren.

Over the years, neighborhood people and members of Friends of Swede Hollow have been having clean up events in Swede Hollow Park. The first one I was involved with was in the late 1970s, which was a Dayton’s Bluff Community Council project. We made a large pile of miscellaneous things including, if I remember right, about 125 tires and many household items including a kitchen sink.

The next year or so, which is about 35 years ago, the Saint Paul Parks Department started sponsoring an annual city-wide parks cleanup in the spring of each year. You can choose any park or help clean up a recreation center.

Friends of Swede Hollow members have been helping out during the city-wide clean up every year in Swede Hollow Park. The Saint Paul Parks employees and volunteers will have bags for trash for volunteers to use.

This year the City-Wide Parks Clean Up is April 23 from 9 to 11:30 a.m. And you can help clean up any of Saint Paul’s parks. To sign up go to ParksCustomerService@ci.stpaul.mn.us

East Side High School Students Can Earn Free College Credit & Personalize Their Education

Joe Nathan

East Side high school students have terrific opportunities to earn free college credit and/or personalize their education in the next two months, thanks to many free public school options. They can help youngsters identify and develop their interests and talents as they develop vital life skills.

In the next month St. Paul families and students can select their school and high school classes for the 2022-23 school year.

One of the most valuable options for high school students, starting for some in ninth grade, is earning free college credit via courses taught in high school, on-line, or on college campuses.

Free Minnesota Post-Secondary Enrollment Option (PSEO) courses are available in “hands on” vocational and traditional academic subjects. Though not as well known, starting in 10th grade, students can take free vocational courses at two-year public colleges like St. Paul and Century Colleges and the Finishing Trade Institute. For students in 11th or 12th grade, they can take academic courses at those and other colleges/universities, including Metro State. Admission requirements vary.

Students can take PSEO courses on college campuses, or via internet. State law requires that high schools let students use school computers to take PSEO. Students must register for PSEO by May 30. Information below: education.mn.gov/mde/fams/dual/pseo/

In addition, 10th through 12th graders who are proficient in any of the 27 world languages can earn free credit at Minnesota State Colleges and Universities by passing tests (they don’t need to take a course). Languages include ASL, Arabic, Chinese, Dakota, German, Hmong, Karen, Ojibwe, Somali, and Spanish. Information here: education.mn.gov/MDE/ds/stds/worlds/seals/.

Virtually every St. Paul district and charter high school offers college level courses called Advanced Placement, International Baccalaureate, or Concurrent Enrollment. Credit for AP and IB is based mostly or entirely on a student’s score on the final exam. College credit for other courses depends on a student’s throughout the course. Minnesota’s Office of Higher Education explains dual credit post-secondary acceptance policies: ohe.state.mn.us/Mpg.cfm?

St. Paul Public Schools (spps.org/choosespps) offers valuable options including language immersion, Montessori, on-line, project based, and others, with a current magnet/alternative enrollment of 10,000-plus students among its 34,000-plus total enrollment.

East Siders also have free charter public school options, such as Community of Peace Academy, Face to Face Academy, Step Academy, and Twin Cities Academy. A map shows charter school locations: mnhartcharterSchools.org/directory/index.php?intDirectoriesCatId=1#filters.

Minnesota developed numerous opportunities for personalized learning over the last 30-plus years. They’re found in school districts, charted, private, home, and online schools. Their availability gives thousands of students’ opportunities to reach their potential while also being a resource for traditional learning. Expansion of personalized learning benefits our increasingly diverse students while also improving traditional learning for all. School leaders and policy makers should make its growth a priority.

View From My Porch

Conscious Sedation

Sage Holben

I’m scheduled for cataract surgery in a couple months, and because my last surgical experience eroded much of my trust and respect of my health care system, I wanted to know ahead of time the sedation that would be used during the coming surgical process.

I was beginning to think sedation was a medical secret. Finally, after several calls and no one answering a simple question (not specific to my state of health), my surgeon called, and after much prodding and playing “word tag” I got my answer as well as a condescending “now you can spend your time worrying about something else.” With that, I remind myself of words told to me: “we respect a surgeon for their expertise, not for their bedside manner.”

In Googling “sedation” I learned moderate sedation has replaced the term conscious sedation. In light of observing societal behaviors over the last two years, I have come to appreciate the term conscious sedation. Perhaps my mind has become more twisted in its thinking; certainly, my humor has become a darker shade of grey.

Conscious sedation is what I think has clouded the thinking and labors of Saint Paul Public Works (PW) department; much of our city’s governance, actually, but I will pick on PW after experiencing the worst winter ever in getting one car removed so our block could be plowed – just once – curb to curb. It took over 35 calls in two days during the last snow emergency, not counting several calls to SPD, mayor’s office and other side calls to push, prod, and encourage the removal of a vehicle that had been abandoned on the street for almost a year.

One day it came sooo close to removal. The ticket “n tow officer was here, the flat-bed tow came, hooked up the car, planted it on the edge of the bed. Then the owner came out and talked the officer out of the tow. The flat-bed driver detached the vehicle, and we were stuck with the car again. A few days later magic happened, and the vehicle was removed and I called to have the curbsides cleared. I was told the records showed it had already been done. Not so! Two city plows had sped up the middle of the block. I told the person from PW this was our only chance. There was only one vehicle at the end of the block, and our curbsides had NOT been cleared! Half an hour later, they were done.

As I read this, as if someone from another neighborhood, perhaps one deemed more privileged, the experience appears minor. It’s one repeated too often. We take into coronavirus COVID and the resulting lack of staff, drivers, etc. It’s difficult to make blanket excuses when calls go into black holes, never returned; non-working vehicles remained dumped on our streets for months or a year before being removed; make blanket excuses when calls go into black holes, never returned; non-working vehicles remained dumped on our streets for months or a year before being removed; cars are allowed to be “worked on” on the street with oil, transmission liquid, and brake fluid drained into our sewers...and into the Mississippi. It’s not just winter that brings out the worst in Public Works — it is all year long.

Note to Public Works: We have four “new” sets of mannequin legs to turn into Intersection Art for Fourth & Bates. If you continue to refuse to work with our local residents’ concerns about speeding, road-racing, and running of the four-way stop intersection, we’ll at least find a bit of enjoyment in being creative in calling attention to our city’s conscious sedation.

The Coyote of Swede Hollow
Mandy Okonek

Not all coyotes conspire to crush speedy roadrunners with anvils. Coyotes are indeed more adept at catching prey than classic cartoons lead one to believe. Wile E. Lucy, or Lucy as we like to call her for short, has moved into the upper bluffs of Swede Hollow Park. She has made her appearance on the top of the stairs leading into the lower hollow, under my gazebo, and in the unfenced yards of neighbors who reside on North Street and Bates Avenue. Lucy appears to be healthy with a full coat of orange and brown fur and a big bushy tail. She is also lightning fast.

Coyotes are often demonized through popular culture as evil predators with a thirst for domesticated pooches but Lucy has been keeping her distance from our beloved canine companions and seems to be taking care of the surplus of mice and rabbits that plague our yards and vegetable gardens. Coyotes have indeed been known to attack family pets. However, the Midwest coyote’s diet consists of mice, rabbits, and the occasional deer which is hunted by the entire pack. The sad fact of urban coyotes is their very short lifespan. According to a Chicago-based urban coyote research group, the most common threat to city-dwelling coyotes is vehicles. This may explain why Lucy is solo.

Through their website, urbancoyotereasearch.com, scientists dedicated to studying the behavior of city-dwelling coyotes share their information for public consumption in hopes to demystify the fear associated with coyotes and find a peaceful way to coexist. They suggest these tips for dealing with coyotes spotted in your neighborhood: Do not feed, do not let pets run loose, do not run away if you see a coyote. Act big. Yell, repellents or fencing may help, do not create conflict where it does not exist and report aggressive, fearless coyotes immediately.

I’ve been monitoring Lucy with a small trap camera and so far, she’s been living happily, diggling it up along Phalen Creek and the surrounding area. She has not threatened any local dogs nor has she raided garbage bins. I’m impressed with the versatility and adaptability of coyotes to live in so many different environments. I’m optimistic that through shared knowledge and awareness of the wild critters residing in our park we can find a way to live together in one big communal pack. If you are a Swede Hollow dog walker, please keep your dog on a leash.

East Side Spring Flowers and Bumblebees

Kathy Sidles

During walks in East Side parks, I have learned where to find early spring flowers. Queen bumblebees come out from overwintering underground and look for these flowers. And later their first set of workers finds the flowers to bring pollen back to the nest. As I walk by, or pick up trash as a Saint Paul Parks volunteer, I look for the bumblebees.

The first spring flowers I see are marsh marigolds at Bruce Vento Nature Sanctuary. They bloom early in the warm spring water. It was fun to take pictures of different bees, including a brown-belted bumblebee, at marsh marigolds during Lower Phalen Creek Project’s “bio-blast” in April last year.

Soon after that, gooseberry bushes bloom in the woods at Bruce Vento, Swede Hollow, and in our yard. It’s fun to watch the big queen bumblebees hang onto the flowers to sip nectar and bring pollen back to their first set of workers in the nest. I pick the berries from the bush in our yard, take off the stems, boil the berries, add sugar, and make jam.

Next after gooseberries I see our local wild plum trees bloom. There are patches of them at Frost Lake Park, at a small tree west of Lake Phalen, a big patch along Phalen Boulevard, a big tree at Dayton’s Bluff, and a grove at East Side Heritage Park. Bumblebees and migrating warblers stop to sip nectar in these beautiful trees. Historically, wild plum trees are important food sources for people. They grow well in Southern Iowa and in our area and are a native plant.

When there are no spring flowers blooming, I see bumblebees getting pollen and nectar from taller creeping Charlie, Dutch clover, and dandelions. To help pollinators you can join the “Mellow May” and “Mow High and Less Often” movements. Your yard can be up to eight inches and meet Saint Paul mowing rules. And then add native plants that are best for native pollinators. Saint Paul rules say you can grow any thing in your garden. This is a Minnesota state website with yard restoration instructions that help pollinators, especially the endangered rusty-patched bumblebee: bwsr.state.mn.us/82.

Art in the Hollow

Set for June 4

Benjamin Mason

Swede Hollow Park will once again welcome summer with the Art in the Hollow festival on June 4. It had been a tradition for 10 years leading into the pandemic, and the art will now return to the hidden forest between Payne and 7th Street the first Saturday of June. Plans are underway to bring the event all the way back to its full footprint from the 7th Street bridge up to the old Hamm Brewery site.

Artists will fill the area with tents, and two stages will host performers the entire festival day, from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. The stage under the 7th Street Improvement Arches will be active with poetry, music, and performers from the Urban Journal and the TAP organization. The center stage near the Swede Henge sculpture will be busy with a wide variety of local artists to provide rhythm and energy in the middle of the festival.

New this year will be plein air painting activities. Visitors will come across painters creating art in the wild, scattered around the park. Plans are in the works to create an exhibit at the local ArtGig967 Payne gallery the following month, but festival goers can watch the art being created on site.

St. Paul Brewing will be the entry point for the festival once again. Their patio will serve food, and the passage behind the patio that winds through the ruins of the brewery will hopefully be open to the public for special entrance to the park for the time of the festival. It’s a rare opportunity to see the area and experience some of the East Side’s physical history. Art in the Hollow combines history, art, nature, and community. It is a convergence point for the East Side community to come together, share stories of the past, discover local artists of all ages, and experience, enjoy music, food, and take in the picturesque setting of the park while enjoying the summer weather. It is a unique neighborhood experience unlike any other art festival or block party.

The festival is very welcoming of local artists, performers, and community members who would like to be involved. Anyone interested can email or visit the website to sign up, volunteer, or reach out for any reason.

Bocce at Yarusso’s

Brad Griffis

The first known documentation of the sport, now known as Bocce, was in 5200 B.C.E. with an Egyptian tomb painting that depicted two boys playing the game. The sport spread throughout the Middle East and Asia. It was eventually adopted by the Greeks and passed on to the Romans. Having developed from games played in the Roman Empire, Bocce developed into its present form in Italy. Bocce, the plural of the Italian word bocca which means “to bowl,” spread around Europe and also in regions to which Italians have migrated.

Italian immigrants brought Bocce to America in the late 19th century. From then until now, bocce has been played the same way. Bocce is played on a court up to 90 feet long and up to 13 feet wide and is traditionally framed by wood or stone walls. The court surface can be dirt, lawn, packed fine stone, or even asphalt. The equipment consists of two sets of four bocce balls and one smaller ball called the pallino.

The game starts by the designated team throwing the pallino to the center of the court. Throwing underhand, the designated team tries to get their four bocce balls close to the pallino. The opposing team then tries to do the same. The scoring team receives one point for each of their balls that is closer to the pallino than the closest ball of the other team. A match is won when a team reaches a predetermined number of points, typically between seven and 13 points.

From the late 1930s Bocce was a popular game played at Yarusso’s Restaurant in Saint Paul’s Railroad Island neighborhood. Governor Rudy Pepich and Caesar Marino, the sixth ranked world player and Railroad Island native, and others from the Lower Payne Avenue participated in matches at Yarusso’s. Bocce continued to be a summertime mainstay in the neighborhood on Saturdays and after Mass on Sundays until the mid 1980s. There is hope that Bocce can once again return to Yarusso Brother’s Italian Restaurant.

It is rumored that a Bocce Court may make an appearance at this year’s Art in the Hollow, which will be held Saturday June 4 from 10 a.m. -5 p.m. in Swede Hollow Park.

Special thanks to Caesar Marino, Gary Narducci, Steve Trimble and Fred Yarusso.

A Hula-Hoop for the Brain

Larry Meuwissen

There is an island South of Africa, near Antarctica, called Bouvet Island. Despite its apparent French name, it belongs to Norway and no humans actually live there. I mention it here, because it was today’s answer to the daily WORLDSIDE puzzle. And unless you have been stuck there for the past two months, you cannot possibly be unaware of the latest pop culture phenomenon Wordle...with one “L.”

In fact, so much has been written about it that telling readers something they don’t already know about it is challenging. Even if you are among the few people who haven’t tried it, you probably have heard or read stories about its creator, John Wardle, and the million bucks he got by selling it to the New York Times (NYT). And though there are many aficionados of the game who are critical of the acquisition and how the Times has "allegedly" changed the game, I think the NYT, which has the world’s best known crossword puzzle, is precisely the place where this new word puzzle belongs, along with its daily spelling bee, letter-box, the “mini” (crossword) and of course, for those having the time for it, the crossword.

No doubt, players are already familiar with articles explaining strategy. My own is the result of being a long-term fan of Wheel of Fortune and remembering the "TS1L0E5" sequence it provides at the outset of its "bonus round." Statisticians suggest that I might do better by starting with a vowel-laden word like “advise,” but the key to success is being attentive and adapting your play to the discoveries of letters and position that are gained with each new guess.

The game itself is highly addictive: like a potato chip, you can’t stop at one. This deceptively simple game that you might think of as an escape while waiting at the dentist’s office will grab hold and cause even more inattention between spouses. The very first time I heard of it, I remarked, “at last, a cure for sudoku.” And that is indeed the rub. For Wordle has spawned an incredible number of spinoffs, each offering an intoxicating seven-letter call — “come play with me.”

The good news is that I now rarely play more than one game of sudoku per day. The bad news is that I play Wordle, as well as its four- and eight-word variations, respectively, “Quordle” and “Oc-tordle.” My undergraduate degree in mathematics, which previously led me astray with sudoku, now has me playing a new numbers game, called, perhaps appropriately, “Nerdle.” Then, there is the aforementioned, “Worldle” which feeds into my passion for world travel. So far, I have only played one game (successfully, I am proud to say) of “Absurdle,” a Wordle clone in which the ultimate correct answer changes in response to your letter choices. There is another one that I have decided to avoid completely, not out of any sense of prudishness, but merely because I don’t think it can be much of a challenge to play: “Lewdle,” a Wordle clone in which the ultimate correct answer changes in response to your letter choices. There is another one that I have decided to avoid completely, not out of any sense of prudishness, but merely because I don’t think it can be much of a challenge to play: “Lewdle,” in which as I understand it, the answer is dirty word of five letters. It leads me to think that most of the answers will be your typical: “four-letter” word with an “s” at the end. For those of you who, like me, remember the hula hoop, you know that the fun is in the challenge.

Yekaldo Memories of Swede Hollow

Edited by Steve Trimble

“This is about life in Swede Hollow. Things I Remember and the People I grew up with. I am not a author or writer. My spelling isn’t so good either. But I try to get close.” – Ralph F. Yekaldo on the front page

These pages are focused on food and life in the neighborhood. They are the way he wrote it without any corrections. His writing with have quotation marks around it. I have done some narrating in some spots.

“My folks lived at No. 18 North Phalen. I was born in 1911 January Jan. 5 down in Old Swede Hollow. There was not much to do but grow up. 1914 they started me at September, Good old Lincoln School…

“There was large families, There sure was a lot to play with. In the winter we use to slide down the hill. We would start up by the church, on Maria St. There was a path we would follow the all the way down. If one of the kids could afford a sled or ski. We made our own. For a sled we would find a overgrown pan hat we could fit in and boy when started down the hill in that path. You got the ride of your life.

“For skis we would go up and see the Miller Bros. Grocery Store. They use to get salt in 100 pounds they came in a wooden barrel. That I what we would ask for the barrel. We would take it apart and match two staffs two widths, and we had the beginning of our skis. And we would down that hill. Oh you would take in your life in your hands and feet. That was not enough there was there two trees down at the bottom you had to ski between them there you had a perfect run…we never got hurt.

“We would get an old shoe we would strip of leather for our feet. I would get my two pieces of leather and tack them together with a nail. We would put a pin in it and when we tied it up we could ski. Swede Hollow was a city within a city. There were a lot of swedes, norse, danes living in the Hollow. Then the Italians took over, and boy it was something. They began to call it “Little Italy,” and they made the most of it. If there was a empty piece of land then they had a garden planted and it was gone in the fall. They would fill a large tub, fill it with sand and mix it in the spring. I recollect when the tomatoes started to get ripe it was tomato paste time. The women would start to get ready.

“They would come down with a loaded of tomatoes and he would be sold out in 5 minutes. But then the price was right…Wherever I you went in the Hollow you would see tomato paste spread out on a pallet on a cloth dry in the sun. And when it was ready to be put away in crock pots for the winter. They would put a little on there hands-put a little oil on the inside of he pots. And then they would mix the tomato paste put some basil leave in it and store it.

“And then it was canning time anything that would go into a crock was canned. Peppers-pickle-egg-plant-green pickled tomatoes. They even canned watermelon rind it made good pickles. Come winter we had everything.

“And then almost every Fall would be butchering time. Everybody had to hog to butcher and my Dad did the butchering. I sit and watch was O. K. I did not get in the way. It was something to remember.”

He then writes about the butchering and how the women were involved. When they hung up the carcass and “the women would take over. They would drain all the blood into a pan that would be for blood sausage. Then they would fill a large tub, fill it with hot water, and insert ashes. They scraped the carcass to get rid of the stiff hairs.

“That hog ended up bacon hams, leafad (lard?!) sausage and some of the skin was even pickled. Their was no waste. Every time a hog was butchered it was a feast. They all helped each other and enjoyed it.”

“If there was anything Italian people did or made it was bread. The bread. We had a outside oven my Dad and a good friend built. It was a domed oven. The inside was walls was all firebrick. The outside was old building brick.

“I remember the flour they used. The brand ‘Ceresota’ in 100 pound sacks. They baked twice, 50 pounds each time.

“My Mom always made nine loafs of bread. And there was always some left over. As I was a stock that aroma. Fresh tomatoes, a little basil leave, orango, salt, pepper, and if you could afford it some pepperoni. But to have a slice a slice of bread just out of the oven with good butter on it, hot. there is nobody since to the beginning of time that had something so good. A king might have had a lot of treasures and gold but he did not have any Italian bread…. Oh yes I was thinking about the flour they used to bake bread, Ceresota Flour. The sack, when it was empty was used to make bloomers for the girls. With that brand name right on their butt. Or was used for dish cloths. Nothing was ever wasted.”

Kong’s Kitchen

St. Paul, MN 55106

Hours: Monday-Saturday 11 a.m. to 8 p.m.
Sunday 11 a.m. to 7:30 p.m.

On a recent Monday I went to Kong’s Kitchen for an evening repast. As I came in, I saw that the front door included a sheet of plywood. They had a recent break-in and fortunately the two burglars have been apprehended.

The space was of medium size but was well put together. There was a great group of large windows that have 14 stools and chairs lined up at the windows along them, and nine or so tables of various sizes with chairs. The restaurant has white drop ceilings with large, inserted lights, and a small TV over the counter. There are also some nice plants and art on the walls, including a very large one of Angkor Wat, a temple city in Cambodia.

The owner of the restaurant is Maly Kong, whose parents came from Cambodias. She learned the business from her mother and wanted a place of her own. She grew up on the East Side and graduated from Johnson High School and is running a business in her mid-thirties with help from the family. She calls her menu a southeast Asian fusion with focus on Cambodian and Thai recipes.

Here are some of the items that they have on their menu. You can see them all by putting Kong’s Kitchen into Google. It seems like this menu should start with Appetizers & Sides. There are 17 different ones including fried egg rolls, tempura, fresh spring roll, fried chicken wings, cream cheese puffs, papaya salad beef or chicken laab, south-east Asian sausage, sticky and jasmine rice.

Logically, Entrées come next. A few are pad thai, that fried rice, pad see ew and sweet-sour chicken. If you like special things, perchance you might be interested in Kong's specials: sauteed lemon grass, and green curry Chinese broccoli with oyster sauce. All of these have a protein choice: chicken, shrimp, tofu. Here come the noodle soups: pho beef, meatball, beef and meatball, seafood, vegetable, or tofu. In the same category there are Ka Piek chicken, or seafood, and khao poon with chicken. As for me, I ordered, as usual, pad thai but experimented and ordered an egg soda that is a drink with egg yolks stirred into sparkling water.

There is no liquor, at least now, but there are several beverages such as freshly brewed ice coffee or freshly brewed thai tea, bubble tea, soda, coconut juice, soy milk, and egg soda. There are some noodle salads — you choose the protein — beef, chicken, pork, or shrimp. There is street parking. They accept cash or cards but no checks. They do take out but currently no delivery and have on their menu. You can see them all by putting Kong’s Kitchen into Google. It seems like this menu should start with Appetizers & Sides.
